Mr. Henry Morgan and his wife, travelling evangelists with a Bible-carriage, have recently been in this neighbourhood. Their addresses at our week evening services, Band of Hope, mothers' meeting, and mission-room, and especially their house-to-house visitation among the poor have been very helpful. I write with the view of bringing them and their work before the ministers and workers of the counties through which they travel, feeling sure that warmly welcomed and wisely used they would be the means of blessing. If I remember rightly they take Berks, Bucks, Oxford, Hampshire, Wilts, Somerset, and Gloucester.

HARRY J. PREECE.
Pastor of Baptist Church, Maidenhead.

Luton.—The members of Wellington-street Baptist Church praise God for the "times of refreshing" recently enjoyed in connection with a week's evangelistic services. Sir Robert Phayre, Rev. H. E. Stone, of Nottingham, and Ned Wright were the preachers. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost were very manifest all through the mission, and we are believing for much fruit as the result. During the week many professed to be converted to God, and believers were revived. A mid-day prayer-meeting and an afternoon Bible-reading were held every day, and both Sir Robert Phayre and Ned Wright conducted an evangelistic service amongst the men at the Brass Foundry near the town. F. J. FELTHAM, Pastor.

Mr. Richard Howton has held a successful ten days' mission in South-street Primitive Methodist Chapel, Keighley. The services throughout were well attended, and much good has resulted.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has concluded an eight days' mission in the Congregational Church, Leyton. The revival and re-consecration of believers has been the great feature of the mission, but some were brought to a knowledge of the truth. The young men received great blessing, and have banded themselves for prayer and evangelistic work.

Ryde.—A six days' mission to women, in connection with the Young Women's Christian Association, has been conducted by Miss Naish, from Weston-super-Mare. The Lord blessed the services held afternoon and evening in the mission-hall. Large numbers came together; many were awakened, and several were led to accept Jesus as their Saviour, while believers were instructed and blessed.

Dr. Pentecost began a four weeks' mission in the city of Dundee on Sunday, Nov. 24. The Bible-readings, given each afternoon in Free St. Paul's Church, have been fairly well attended. The history of Israel, as recorded in Exodus, has been the subject. The evening meetings, during the week, are being held in St. Clement's Church, in the centre of the city, and the interest manifested has been very cheering. Next week we hope to give a more detailed notice.

Mr. Henry Thorne conducted a united Gospel mission in St. George's Hall, Burton-on-Trent, from November 2 to 18. The mission, inaugurated by the local Y.M.C.A., was participated in by all the evangelical churches in the town. Deep conviction was a feature of the work, and at each Gospel meeting a number were led to the Saviour. For these young Christians addresses are being given upon "The Christian Life" by some of the ministers and clergy of the town in the Y.M.C.A. hall.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged for the month of December. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer by our readers:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken: to Dec. 15, Banff, N.B. Rev. J. Cullin: Dec. 6 to 16, Crockenhill, near Swanley Junction, Kent. Rev. A. R. D'Arcy, to Dec. 10, Cossington, Bridgewater. Rev. H. Armstrong Hall: Dec. 10 to 13, Short Teaching Mission, St. Michael's, Bournemouth. Rev. J. H. Haslam: Dec. 7 to 17, Holy Trinity, Gravesend. Rev. W. Haslam: Dec. 7 to 17, Long Clamson, Melton Mowbray. Rev. R. D. Monro: to Dec. 11, Churchill, near Bristol; 28 to Jan. 9, Chiselborough, with West Chinnock. Rev. Dr. Morris: Dec. 7 to 23, Wilford, Nottingham. Rev. Canon Pennefather: Dec. 7 to 17, St. Paul's, Alnwick. Rev. F. E. Rogers: Dec. 7 to 17, Blackmore, Ingatestone. Rev. E. B. Russell: to Dec. 9, Burstow, Horley, Surrey.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for December 10 (Ps. cxxi. 7): "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: He shall preserve thy soul."

MR. G. H. LORD'S addresses on Oriental life have been highly appreciated by many London audiences. Recently at Hastings he delighted large audiences in the Brassey Assembly Rooms. The lectures were delivered under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and comprised a realistic description of life in Palestine, Syria, and Egypt.

THE HOMES FOR GIRLS at Ealing and Sunbury, in connection with the National Refuges, are the subject of an interesting sketch in The Queen. These Homes are caring for and training to useful lives a large number of girls who would otherwise be neglected, and would probably go to swell the ranks of the vicious and the criminal.

MISSION TO CITY YOUNG MEN.—After much preparation and earnest prayer, Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, N.B., commenced a mission at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, in the middle of last month, which was vigorously maintained to the end. Each evening a considerable band of workers assembled for prayer, and subsequently sallied forth into the adjacent streets to seek to draw into the meetings the numbers who were passing by. Earnest efforts were also made to secure the attendance of the young men in the large City houses. The result, as regards attendance, was fairly satisfactory; as regards the Gospel clearly and vigorously proclaimed it was eminently good. In the end, not only were many decisions for Christ chronicled—some very striking cases being amongst the number—but many of those deeply affected by the truth have yet to be gathered in. A very interesting thanksgiving meeting was held on Friday evening last, presided over by Mr. Robert Paton.

The Good Old Times," "Whe the King Comes to His Own!" and "Waiting for th Answer." The last is poetical, and breathes a stim lating confidence in God.

Letters to the Editor.

THE QUEEN v. BARNARDO.

DEAR SIR,—As your readers will already have learned from the daily press, I have again been worsted in the law courts in another effort to safeguard my poor children. The present case is, in brief, as follows:—

A little boy, aged eleven, after an experience of long drawn out cruelty and neglect, was twice deserted, and eventually sold by an inhuman mother for a few shillings to two organ-grinders. The latter half-starved, beat, and finally abandoned the child near Folkestone, in the streets of which town he was discovered at midnight, in September, 1888, by the police, and, after some correspondence, was sent to me. Further affidavits filed in Court proved that the wretched mother, who is nominally a Romanist, is, to this hour, of drunken, profligate, and notoriously immoral habits. Yet, notwithstanding her monstrous ill-treatment of her son, she was induced by others (she herself being perfectly indifferent to his welfare) to apply for his transfer not to her own custody—she does not want, or care for, him—but to that of a Roman Catholic institution.

In refusing this application I was influenced by three considerations. First, that it was not made bonâ fide by the mother, but by other persons who did not present any authorisation from her, and I did not believe that I was called upon to give any information whatever to unauthorised persons who had busied themselves in the matter. Second, that I had already placed the boy in a good home in Canada, where he was adopted by a Christian gentleman of independent means as his own son. Third, that the boy's father had lived and died a Wesleyan Methodist, and that I had learned from the testimony of the man's relatives, still living, that he had desired his child to be brought up in his own faith.

Nevertheless, the Court on Saturday held that an application for the return of a child, even if made to me by persons not related to that child, and who did not present any authorisation from the mother, was practically an application by the mother herself, and the Court thereupon decided against me, and issued a writ commanding the return of the boy. In effect, therefore, although this woman had neglected every parental duty, though she had deliberately acted so as to blast her boy's life, and though, both by her immorality and her cruelty, she had made his childhood hideous till he came to me, yet she still retains parental RIGHTS—rights which may now be exercised at the bidding of others so as to compel me to sever the happily-formed ties connecting this poor boy with his new life in a Christian household in Canada, to bring him over here, and to deliver him up to the Roman Catholics, who have spurred on the mother to assert rights still vested in her (doubtless to her own great surprise) by the existing law.

With regard to what appears to be the serious imputations upon my methods made by the Court, to the effect that I had handed over the boy to an unknown person, who might be bad or good, I have only here to assert that although my knowledge of the gentleman to whom the boy went was brief, it was to my mind eminently satisfactory, and perfectly sufficient to assure me of his ability to support the boy, of his own religious and Christian character, and of the benevolent motives which induced him to become the boy's guardian. The suggestion, too, that our whole work of emigration has been carried out on similar lines, will fall to the ground when it is known that of 4200 children placed out in the Colonies, only five or six have been so placed out that I could not at once put my hands upon them; and even in the case of these five or six, I made myself thoroughly satisfied before I surrendered them, of the moral and religious character of the persons to whose charge they were committed, and of the satisfactory nature of the social surroundings amidst which the future of the children would be passed.

At this momentous crisis affecting not one only, but very many unfortunate waifs and strays already rescued from vicious surroundings, it becomes a serious question, What are to be the next steps? As a matter of course, an appeal will be lodged against a decision which, however it may represent the law of the land, is, as it appears to me, not only opposed to the dictates of justice in this particular instance, but is also contrary to the manifest tendency of all recent legislation on behalf of children.

My great hope, however, lies not so much in the law as it now stands, as in the believing prayers of God's people everywhere, and in the formation through that means of such a strong Protestant opinion as shall avert the evil consequences of decisions which may be obtained against me by the hundred, and in cases where we know the whereabouts of the children, but where we had not in the first instance obtained the consent of the profligate relatives, and which, although based upon the strict letter of the existing law, surely violate all sense of justice, while they outrage the Christian conscience of the community. That an alteration in the present law is urgently necessary, no one who has had all the material of the case before them can deny. The writ of Habeas Corpus is issued upon the ground that the mother (even such a mother as this woman has proved herself to be) still retains parental rights which the law recognises. The question, however, which should press itself more and more upon the conscience of the nation is, Should any parent who has acted as this woman Gossage has been proved to have acted towards her child over a long period of years, be suffered now at the instigation of any person, it matters not who, to exercise those rights which we all admit belong to ordinary parents? Has not such a person forfeited all such rights? Both in the United States, in some of our Colonies, and in several European countries, the public law of the land has already decided the question, and a mother like the woman Gossage would not be permitted to exercise her rights so as to lead, as in this case, to the issue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus by the Court of Queen's Bench, against the heads of an Institution that had sheltered the child whom she had so grossly neglected and ill-treated.

Meanwhile, I am writing the fuller story of this poor boy, and of the steps which have been taken by the Roman Catholic conspiracy to ensnare him, and to besmirch our work; and in a few days I hope to have ready for publication a booklet entitled, "Sold and Betrayed: The True Story of Harry G." I am also making arrangements to visit several large cities throughout the kingdom, accompanied, I hope, by Mr. James B. Wookey, to address meetings during December on the general subject of the neglect and subsequent pursuit of such poor children by the Romanists. The first meeting is already convened for Tuesday evening next, December 10, at eight o'clock, in the Large Exeter Hall, Strand, when I will fully explain every part of my action that seems obscure, and expose the methods which have led to the issue of this writ. Tickets of admission may be obtained (free) on application to our secretary, Mr. John Odling, as below. I hope that the clergyman who first rescued the boy Gossage at Folkestone will be present, and that many other friends of poor children will take part.

One word only as to the costs incurred in this litigation. On this subject the minds of our contributors may be at rest. Not one shilling sent in for the support of the Homes shall be spent on these law costs. I have made myself personally responsible for them all. Only those offerings specially contributed for law costs, and so designated by the donors, shall be appropriated to that object.

At a moment of such profound and anxious deliberation I cast myself upon the loving and prayerful sympathy of those who for years have been my faithful companions in labour among the homeless children of the streets.

I am, dear Sir, your obedient servant,
THOS. J. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E., December 2, 1889.

OUR GIPSY AND VAN CHILDREN.

SIR,—It is very sad to think that the Education Acts are not wide enough and strong enough to embrace all the poor children for whom they have been passed. I was in Essex a few days ago, and a gipsy told me that he had recently sent three of his children with their school pence to a Board School near, but the schoolmaster sent them back to their tent and van, to remain in ignorance. When will the nation's eyes be opened, and the scores of thousands of our poor little nomads placed on the same legislative lines as other children are.—Faithfully yours, GEORGE SMITH.

The Cabin, Crick, Rugby, November 25.

A QUESTION FOR TOTAL ABSTAINERS.

DEAR SIR,—Although not quite a total abstainer myself, perhaps you will permit me to reply to your correspondent's letter on the above subject.

If it is really necessary that total abstainers should, on conscientious grounds, deal only with grocers who are without the wine and spirit licence, surely one of our leading temperance societies could readily make inquiries and furnish a printed list to those who might require it. Should this not be practicable, a grocers' company might be formed upon the model of co-operative stores, the shareholders (all abstainers) "pledging" themselves to support and recommend the venture.

The point, however, which is really raised by Mr. Johnston is this: Ought total abstainers to refuse to deal at a shop which is in any way connected with the liquor traffic? Let me ask him by way of reply: Ought professing Christians to "boycott" their neighbours for exercising a legitimate, although perhaps not a desirable, trade so far as intoxicants are concerned?

Naturally enough, an abstainer declines to have anything to do with the brewery interests; but can the purchaser of a piece of bacon or a pound of sugar from a respectable grocer who happens also to sell wine and spirits be directly or indirectly encouraging the liquor traffic? If so, we must be consistent, and leave off week-day railway travelling, because of the iniquitous Sunday toil; we must cease to buy even a Bible from the bookseller, because his stall also contains a mass of pernicious literature; nor could we purchase an umbrella at the draper's, because there might be the most heartless "sweating" in the cheap tie department!

The mere act of dealing with a grocer, as a grocer, is not to patronise him beyond the one business, and, if perchance he should happen to be a gambler, we have not countenanced that by making our grocery purchases.

In short, I submit that the abstainer who buys plenty of groceries but no wine shows at once that he approves of the one business, but for some reason will not support the other. The two departments are distinct.

Yours faithfully, EASY CONSCIENCE.

DEAR SIR,—I have long held the opinion expressed by Mr. Andrew Johnston in reference to abstainers dealing with grocers who traffic in the drink. I fear that many are not prepared to deny themselves for conscience' sake, and shut their eyes to what they know to be inconsistent for the sake of the gain.

There are grocers who have given up the sale of drink on principle in all parts of London and the suburbs, if only known and sought out. My personal experience in this matter of some four years' duration is a loss of several customers and a known gain of only one.

The complaint is often heard that abstainers do not encourage those who see the evil of the grocers' licence and abandon it, and I think you deserve their thanks for bringing it before the abstaining public in this prominent manner. I enclose my name, but for obvious reasons desire to be,

Yours respectfully, FIDES.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A course of lectures on "Christ and Human Society" is to be delivered in St. Saviour's Church, Southwark, at the evening service (7 p.m.), on the next four Sundays, by Bishop Barry, D.D., late of Sydney.

The Bishop of Rochester has issued an appeal for additional workers in the spiritually destitute region south of the Thames. Dr. Thorold mentions that one friend has promised for three years the stipends of five curates at £120 a year.

Rev. Allan Pitman, vicar of Christ Church, Tunstall, Rev. M. Cecil Dickenson, and Rev. Alfred J. Knight, curates of the same church, have forwarded their resignations to the Bishop of Lichfield, with the intention of proceeding to Canada to labour as missionaries.

The following ladies and gentlemen have been accepted by the Committee of the C.M.S. for missionary service abroad:—Mr. Charles F. Harford-Battersby, M.R.C.S., son of the late Canon Battersby (the founder of the Keswick Convention), for the Niger; Rev. Arthur E. Dibben, curate of St. John's, Chelsea; and Mrs. and Miss Bywater, a widow lady and her daughter from Keswick, where the former has been an active Christian worker. Miss Bywater has been a Mildmay deaconess.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson, preaching last Sabbath on Isa. viii. 20, applied it to the subject of literature. Some journals, he said, which had been started on orthodox principles, had drifted away until they had begun even to deny the inspiration of the Scriptures. Such journals, instead of being helpful to Christian life, were a hindrance, and a cause of stumbling to the young in households to which they are admitted.

SALVATION ARMY.

Reports come from Crewe of numerous professed conversions.

The London headquarters were almost destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning.

Miss Eva Booth is holding special meetings at Plymouth, Penzance, and Bath, and next week at Stockport, Rochdale, Southport, and Lancaster.

The Christmas number of All the World is just issued, entitled Quick March, and contains some very interesting articles, and graphic descriptions of Army life and warfare. The frontispiece is a lifelike picture of Mr. and Mrs. Ballington Booth, of New York.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. G. Hedgelong, a Congregational evangelist, while riding a tricycle to Godalming from Guildford, a few days ago, was run into by a horse and trap, and received injuries, from the effects of which he shortly afterwards died.

A new mission-hall in connection with St. Mary's Chapel, Morley, near Leeds, has been opened. The mission was originated about nine years ago by Rev. W. E. Anderton, of Woodford, who was then pastor of the church.

Special services of an impressive kind have been held at the Congregational Church, Harpenden, from Nov. 25 to 28, Revs. H. Collins (Luton), J. K. Baker (Dunstable), H. W. Taylor (St. Albans), and J. Alford Davies (New Barnet), delivering sermons or addresses.

BAPTIST.

A new mission-room has lately been opened at Rumney, near Cardiff. This mission-hall is the outcome of seven years' labour on the part of several young men, members of neighbouring churches.

Rev. W. R. Skerry, late of Woodberry Down, Stamford-hill, N., commenced his ministry at Denmark-place Chapel, Camberwell, so long associated with the name of Dr. Charles Stanford. The church has been without a pastor since the death of Dr. Stanford in March, 1886.

Week by week persons come forward to join the Church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. On the last Monday but one before he left London for Mentone, Mr. Spurgeon saw a large number, and was able to accept twenty to be proposed for fellowship. Remarking upon this in The Sword and Trowel, Mr. Spurgeon says: "Better than all other prosperity is this of soul-winning. A measure of blessing rests permanently on all the works. We have enjoyed one steady, unbroken revival for some six-and-thirty years. Let the name of the Lord be magnified!"

This autumn the American Baptist Missionary Union has sent out thirty-three men to heathen lands, twenty-three of whom go out for the first time. In connection with the English Baptist Missionary Society ten new missionaries have gone out since March 31—six to the Congo, three to India, and one to Italy. At the last meeting of the committee another candidate, Mr. Stapleton, of Bristol College, was accepted for the Congo, and Mr. J. A. A. Fuller, son of a native missionary from the Cameroons, was also accepted as an assistant for the Congo Mission.

The new Welsh Chapel at Castle-street, Oxford-circus, has been opened. This church was founded in 1839 with twelve members, since increased to 250, and services for a long time were held in various halls in the neighbourhood. The new chapel will seat six or seven hundred persons. There are in connection with the church a library and a reading-room for the use of men, as well as one for women—open every night. Active mission work is carried on amongst the Welsh people in the neighbourhood by a band of young men connected with the church.

METHODIST.

A scheme for a Devon and Dorset Mission, by which 400 square miles will be covered, has been sanctioned by the Wesleyan Home Mission Committee. The district is considered to be badly off for evangelistic efforts in the villages, but existing agencies will not be interfered with. Three ministers and a sufficient number of lay agents will be set apart for the work of evangelisation.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

News of a cheering character has been received from Brindisi, from the last party of out-going missionaries. Much disappointment is felt, however, on account of the refusal of the Mandarins to allow the Friends' missionaries to settle in the city where they had hoped and arranged to establish their mission in China.

Leinster Quarterly Meeting, held in Dublin last week, was a time of much interest and blessing. Among the speakers were John T. Dorland, of Canada; Thomas W. Fisher and John B. Beale, of Dublin; J. Ernest Grubb, of Carrick-on-Suir; and Arthur Pim, of Lisburn. Foreign mission work occupied much attention, and was recommended to subordinate meetings. Mr. W. E. Darby, of London, secretary of the Peace Society, delivered an address in Sackville Hall on the following evening.

Since the revival of the Friends' meeting in Oxford, not two years ago, the work has steadily grown. There are now children's schools, and a flourishing Band of Hope, a men's adult school, and Christian band, besides the Gospel services. To render aid to the work all round an eight days' mission has just been held, conducted by William Hobson, of Cardiff. The attendance and interest have been excellent, and local Friends cheered and encouraged. The concluding meetings on Sunday last were times of solemnity and blessing.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A new and cheap edition of the life of Dr. Fleming Stevenson, of Rattigar, Dublin, is about to be published.

A new departure in the work of the successful mission in the Circus, Belfast, by Rev. R. C. Johnson and James Grubb, was inaugurated on Saturday night, when a series of happy evenings for the people, including cheerful singing, good music, and brief testimonies, was begun under encouraging auspices.

A public meeting was held last week in Belfast, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., to protest against the demoralising habit of men and boys assembling in some of the public squares and streets of the city for betting purposes. The attention of the police authorities was directed to the matter, and an appeal made to the Press to discontinue publishing betting transactions.

Rev. Dr. Fletcher, incumbent of St. Barnabas' Church, Dublin, well known as one of the most earnest, godly ministers in the city, has had serious cause to complain of Romish intolerance in Dublin. He says he knows two clergymen who have been struck with stones deliberately aimed at them while walking through the streets; that he himself has been pelted and stoned; that the children attending his day and Sunday-schools are annoyed, insulted, and pelted; that the glass in his church windows has been frequently broken; and that language the most revolting, filthy, and lewd, is used by Romanists towards the Protestant clergy in all parts of the city.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

Sermons on temperance will be preached in every Free Church in Scotland in the course of the present month.

Free St. George's Church, Edinburgh (Rev. Dr. Whyte's), has a membership of 1149, more than one hundred office-bearers, and contributes yearly to all objects nearly £10,000.

Mr. Henderson, of Devenha, ex-Lord Provost of Aberdeen, has handed the sum of £4000 to the Society for Female Education in India and Africa, as a memorial of his wife, who took a great interest in the Society's work.

At the close of an address on "Temptation," by Rev. James Stalker, in the Free Church, Irvine, Rev. R. S. Macaulay expressed the hope that it would result in the formation of Christian Associations in connection with all the churches in Irvine.

At the monthly meeting of Hamilton Free Presbytery a conference took place on betting and gambling. One of the speakers thought that as ministers their own hands were not altogether clean when they countenanced raffles and lotteries at bazaars held in aid of church objects.

The annual meeting of the Scottish East Coast Mission was held in Edinburgh on Monday week, when Mr. W. Allardyce gave a cheering report of the year's work. The operations of the Mission, which extend from Berwick-on-Tweed to Arbroath, include regular visitation of a fishing population of over 18,000 souls.

On Monday evening, last week, the annual missionary meeting in connection with the Free Church Presbytery of Glasgow, took place in the Waterloo Rooms. An address was delivered by Principal Rainy, who said that he was not disposed to lose his temper over the criticism to which missionary work had been exposed, because he felt sure that criticism might do good service in the way of suggesting features and wants that ought to be attended to.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. H. Power, vicar of Farington, near Preston, since 1844.—Rev. W. Davy, of Wotton-under-Edge, who about three years ago retired from the ministry of the Baptist church in that town.—Mrs. Mary Martin Bailey, wife of Rev. W. Bailey, rector of Colney Heath, who was for eighteen years a missionary of the London Jews Society in Jerusalem.—Rev. H. Mathias, pastor of the Congregational Church at Wolfsdale, Pembrokeshire, South Wales, for more than fifty years.—Rev. Charles Nathaniel Roberts, Precentor of Christ Church, Oxford.—Rev. Richard Thomas, Welsh Baptist minister at Holyhead.—Rev. Canon Babington, rector of Glendermott, Londonderry.—Rev. Henry Wheeler, of Tamworth, for fifty-two years in the ministry of the Primitive Methodist Connexion.—Mr. W. H. Carey, aged seventy-two, grandson of the great Dr. Carey, and father of the present Dr. Carey, of India.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

We understand that in the Nonconforming churches generally Temperance Sunday was better observed than heretofore.

The temperance world in Manchester and the North feel that in the death of Dr. Macfadyen they have lost one who was to their cause a tower of strength.

In opening a new Lads' Home in connection with Rev. Charles Garrett's Mission, Liverpool, Mr. S. Smith, M.P., said but for the drink such Homes would scarcely be needed.

In view of the reintroduction in the approaching Parliament of the Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill, a series of largely attended and enthusiastic conferences have been held, under the auspices of the Irish Temperance League, at Lisburn, Portadown, and Omagh. Deep disappointment was expressed at the failure of the Government to assist in the passing of the Bill last session.

FOREIGN.

An International European Temperance Union is proposed.

A drunkards' rescue mission has been started in connection with the Bombay Prison Gate Brigade.

Staff-Captain Muklanaud in All the World (November) gives a graphic account of the drink-shops of Bombay. He found abundant evidence of the hindrance caused to Christianity by the drinking and drunkenness of so-called "Christians."

Rev. Thomas Evans, missionary in India, says that during the last twelve years or more the drink traffic has made rapid strides in India. A reform has, however, begun. Owing to instructions sent out by Lord Cross, the most fruitful sources of temptation are to be abolished, and a number of the worst of the outstills in Bengal have already been closed.

Notices.

THE tract inquired for by a correspondent in our last issue, "the principal point of which was the conversion of a young lady during the singing, by herself, of a sacred song at an evening party," is entitled "The Altered Choice; or, Christ or the World—Which?" It is No. 802 of the "Every Week" Series, issued by the Religious Tract Society.

BELGIUM.—In many parts the tide is setting strong against the Church of Rome. At a patriotic banquet lately at Liége, M. Frère Orban, one of the prominent statesmen of the country, referring to the persecutions to which Protestants were subjected in the sixeeenth century, said, "The inquisitors of the Pope and Bishop Erard de Lamarck carried out their mission at Liége with nameless atrocities. It should never be forgotten that men were at that time burned alive because they regarded Luther as an evangelist, while others were condemned to death, to exile, and confiscation of property for similar 'crimes.' One poor man, condemned for having a copy of the Bible in the vulgar tongue, asked to say a word to the people. The privilege was refused him, however; and, in order to secure the silence thus commanded, the Bishop had the condemned man's tongue pierced with a nail. It is well that, now that the people are in many instances shaking themselves from the fetters of Rome, the truth should be told as to the circumstances under which evangelical truth was stamped out of their land three centuries ago."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, DEC. 8.—2 Kings XIII.

Jehoahaz in Israel (1—9).—At first sight there seems a discrepancy between vv. 1 and 10. We must account for the longer period by supposing that his father admitted Jehoahaz to some share of power during his lifetime. It is very interesting and pathetic to read of the compassion of Jehovah, notwithstanding the evil done in his holy sight. He heard the prayer of the king, in spite of all the evil he had done, and answered it by sending a saviour. How quick is God to hear prayer, even of the sinner. And if for temporal, how much more for spiritual blessing.

Jehoash (10—19).—The grandson of Jehu, he followed in the idolatries which had become indigenous on Israel's soil. The death of Elisha was a most memorable event. It was now sixty years since he had commenced his public work as Elijah's servant. The king anticipated his death in much the same words as had been used by Elisha of his master (ii. 12). A good man's prayers are more than equivalent to a squadron of soldiers. Mary of Scots dreaded most John Knox's prayers. The frail hand of the prophet gave direction and strength to the king's arms (Gen. xlix. 24). Put your strength under the gentle hand of Jesus. What a pity it is when men limit the gracious purposes of God by want of sufficient appropriating faith. Joash only conquered according to the number of times he smote the ground.

Miracle at Elisha's grave (20—25).—The dead body was the means of giving life. Surely Elisha was living still, for God is not God of the dead, but of the living (Matt. xxii. 32). And is it not a parable of how the grave of Jesus is the means of life? You must die in order to live. And so also the influences of those who have passed home to God, emanating from books, &c., may win many to holiness.

MONDAY, DEC. 9.—2 Kings XIV.

Amaziah in Judah (1—7).—There was a gleam of better things in this reign, although not of the best (3). The policy of slaying the children of murderers was probably dictated by the fear of their rising up to avenge their fathers' death, but it was expressly forbidden (Deut. xxiv. 16). The revolt of Edom was ended by a successful campaign (viii. 22). Selah, or Petra, was largely excavated out of rock, hence its name. Oh, to live in the Rock!

His defeat and death (8—22).—It is a foolish thing to run into collision with any who are willing to live peacefully with us. The beginning of strife is like the letting out of water, which may become a flood before which the instigator may be swept away. The parable was rather mortifying in its comparisons, but it conveyed salutary advice. How often are men allured to ruin by their first successes. The great enemy of souls hides the hook by the gaudy fly, the pitfall by the layer of soil. If a man persist in spite of all warnings given by friends or foes, he must bear the consequences of his own folly. We have a glimpse in the parallel record of the pride and arrogance of the king, which culminated in this disastrous challenge and overthrow (2 Chron. xxv. 16).

Jeroboam II. in Israel (23—29).—The longest reign of any of the kings in Israel. The Syrians had begun to cut Israel short, at Hamath in the north, and all down the Jordan to the Dead Sea. These victories, which marked the reign of this intrepid soldier, were granted by the goodness of God, who was touched by the miseries of his people, and the remembrance of his covenant. Jonah, Hosea, Joel, and Amos prophesied at this period. They foretold the earthquake which took place in this reign; the invasion of locusts and caterpillars; and the terrible drought. Man's sin disorders the entire course of the world of nature, which groans and travails. Remember the threefold groaning of Rom. viii. 21—26.

TUESDAY, DEC. 10.—2 Kings XV.

Azariah or Uzziah in Judah (1—7).—We must turn to the parallel account in order to understand how glorious was the inauguration of this reign (2 Chron. xxv.). His leprosy befell him because he sought to combine the kingship with the priesthood, a prerogative which can only be realised in our Lord (Zech. vi. 13).

The last kings of Israel (8—31).—For more than thirty years preceding its dissolution, the northern kingdom was terribly distracted. Anarchy, idolatry, high-handed wrong, and immorality swept like a hurricane over the land. Micah and Isaiah were living and prophesying in Judah, under the good king Hezekiah, and there was a remarkable contrast between the state of the two kingdoms. Now ensued the first of those captivities which swept the guilty people away. Notwithstanding the alliance of which Isaiah speaks (Isa. vii. 2, &c.), "the bee that was in the land of Assyria," the dreaded king of Assyria, came against Israel, and carried captive a large portion of the northern inhabitants of the land.

Jotham, king of Judah (32—38).—A true conception of the state of the land may be obtained from the earlier chapters of Isaiah. Wantonness, pride, luxury, oppression rode rough-shod over the land. Yet it was at this very crisis that the prophet saw his marvellous vision (vi. 1). Punishment could not be longer averted. "The Lord began to send" (27). These men were unrighteous and unholy, yet they are said to have been God-sent. And so always, whilst wicked men think only of executing their own malignant designs, they are really subserving the plans of the Most High (Acts iv. 27, 28). But the full weight of this blow was averted during the comparatively good reign of Jotham, to fall with double force during that of his wicked son.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 11.—2 Kings XVI.

Ahaz in Judah (1—4).—He not only passed his children through lines of fire, but seems to have burnt some of them (2 Chron. xxviii. 3). He dared to bring back the abominations of the heathen. It would be incredible to understand it, did we not know something of the fickleness and evil of our own hearts. Moreover, all the attractions of sensuality were associated with the rites of the idolatries around. The hills and groves of God's own land were thus contaminated with impurities, which we dare not name.

The confederacy of Israel and Syria (5—9).—Isaiah divulges their object (vii. 6). It is most desirable to read Isa. vii., viii., ix., in which the prophet calms the fear of the prople, under the shadow of this great calamity. If Judah had only relied on these successive promises, and had left God to interpose on their behalf, there would have been certain deliverance and victory. But, instead of this, a bribe was offered to the king of Assyria to do what the Almighty would have done Himself, and thus relations were opened with that distant kingdom, which ended in disaster to Judah.

Idolatry (10—16).—The heavenly designed altar was replaced by one modelled after that in Damascus, and sacrifices offered to false gods (2 Chron. xxviii. 23). We wonder at the exchange, and yet how often do we substitute our own thoughts and plans for God's! Let us see to it that we guard our altar intact (Heb. xiii. 10). What a wily and unprincipled priest was here (16).

The Spoiling of the Temple (17—20).—The laver was for the ablutions of the priests. The covert for the larger congregations of the Sabbath. The entry from the royal palace to the Temple. Evidently Assyrian influence was very much in the ascendant; and everything was done to secure a uniformity between the ritual at Jerusalem and that of their powerful neighbours. Let us turn from this sad apostasy to the predictions of our Emmanuel (Isa. viii. 8).

THURSDAY, DEC. 12.—2 Kings XVII.

Hoshea in Israel (1—6).—The measure of their iniquities was now full. Israel in vain sought to avert its fate by appealing, not to the Lord, but to the king of Egypt. But Egypt was no match for the powerful kingdom which was arising on the banks of the Euphrates. To lean upon Pharoah was to rest on the staff of a broken reed. What agony must have been endured during the three years' siege! Shalmaneser changed the inhabitants (7 and 24), a policy which was continued by Esarhaddon (Ezra iv. 2). The object was to keep the country tilled, but to make rebellion less likely and easy. But, after all, the Assyrian was the rod of the Divine justice (Isa. x. 5).

The Divine indictment against Israel (7—23).—The story of their sins is set down, so that this page reads like a chapter of God's Book of Remembrance. And side by side there is the record of the Divine endeavours to deliver them (13). Note the remarkable expression of ver. 15, that we become like the objects we follow (Ps. cxv. 8). Israel was never restored, but remained dispersed among the nations, many of them being added to the Church in after days, as addressed in 1 Pet. i. 1, 2.

The story of the new settlers (24—41).—Babylon had fallen under the power of Assyria, and was destined to become its principal city. It was a remarkable application. These newly imported nations, like others of their time, thought that each land was under the protection of a local deity, whom it was necessary to propitiate. It was a very mongrel religion (32, 33, 41). Jehovah, from fear, the rest from true attachment. But is there not something like this still, with many around us. They go to a place of worship, &c., with the intention of appeasing God, whilst they make for themselves many an idol besides (Matt. vi. 24; 1 John v. 22).

FRIDAY, DEC. 13.—2 Kings XVIII.

Hezekiah (1—12).—Wonderful that such a father as Ahaz should have had such a son; but he probably had a good mother (2 Chron. xxix. 1, xxvi. 5). He at once commenced a course of reform. In the rooting out of idolatry, and in the destruction of the brazen serpent, which had become a kind of fetish, in the same way as the crucifix has become now, he must have raised an immense amount of opposition; but he did not swerve to the right or left. What a magnificent testimony is in ver. 6. How certainly will the Lord be with us, so long as we are with Him (2 Chron. xv. 2). How indifferent is he to opposition whose trust is in God (5). Probably the fall of Israel made Hezekiah more determined to purge out the like iniquities from his own country.

Sennacherib (13—16).—It must have been a vast disappointment when the Assyrian came to invade Judah. But the invasion would probably give a great assistance to the cause of reform, arresting and warning many who thought the king too particular. If only Hezekiah had trusted this time, as he did next, there would have been no need for the bribe. God would have delivered his people.

Rab-shakeh (17—37).—Three years after, the generals of Sennacherib beleaguered the city, in very close quarters. It is thought by some that this bold blasphemer was an apostate Jew, hence the added force of his words. He tried to prove that they had forfeited the Divine protection (22); that they had themselves come at the bidding of Jehovah (25); and that He would not be able to do more for them than other gods (34). The policy of silence is always the wisest. Let human wrath work itself out (1 Peter ii. 23).

SATURDAY, DEC. 14.—2 Kings XIX.

The royal anguish (1—7).—That bowed form of Hezekiah before the altar of God, whilst his servants and ministers were with Isaiah, is a beautiful emblem of the true way of meeting trouble. And it is very blessed, when our cause is so identified with God's, that we can appeal for help on his own account. All through this crisis Isaiah acted the part of a patriot and hero. He poured forth words of burning eloquence and fire, denouncing the Assyrian, predicting his doom, and encouraging the people. The one figure which stands out in bold relief amid the storm is that of the intrepid prophet, who even dares to compose a funeral ode for the burial of the imperious king. There is hardly anything in all literature so sublime as Isa. x., xi., xii., xiii., xiv.

The blasphemous letter (8—34).—The siege of Jerusalem was postponed till Sennacherib could undertake it in person. The hostile forces drew off. But a letter was sent full of insult and blasphemy and proud certainty of ultimate success. Not the last letter which has been written with the ink of gall and bitterness, and sent to the servants of God. It is always best to lay such before God, and leave Him to answer them (14). What you ask for God's glory is sure of an answer, and in this case it seems to have been given whilst the king was in prayer. Ponder the magnificence of this ode. Remember that God is equally prepared to defend all who put their trust in Him, from all assaults, spiritual and temporal. This would seem to have been the Sabbatic year, and the produce was to be sufficient for two years (29). No lack to them that trust in God!

The enemy's destruction (35—37).—How brief and significant the record! One of the angels was enough, how strong they must be. How foolish to wage war with God. Out of this memorable episode sprang Ps. lxxvi.

THE FORTHCOMING TUDOR EXHIBITION in London will include a show of books. A complete series of Bibles in the English language, from Tyndale's Pentateuch of 1534 to the recent authorised version will be exhibited. This series will include Welsh and Irish versions.

SOLOMON'S FALL.—1 KINGS xi. 4—13.

GOLDEN TEXT: 1 Cor. x. 12.

FOR over thirty years Solomon has reigned; and his wisdom, and glory, and honour have spread his fame far and wide. It is unspeakably sad to read that a life thus exalted should suffer such a terrible and humiliating fall. The Golden Text is wisely chosen. If Solomon, after escaping the evils to which his youth was exposed, fell so terribly in his old age (4), who is secure? The lesson is full of instruction and warning.

(1) Solomon's Fall (4—8).—Note (1) how it began. No man falls thus terribly without a long preparation for it. Men back-slide—gradually, perhaps imperceptibly. There is a hidden heart-declension before anything so glaring takes place in the life. No man goes at one leap from the height which Solomon previously occupied to the degrading depths in which we find him here. His polygamy began his fall. This was contrary to God's original appointment (Gen. ii. 24); and, though practised by many of God's people, never failed to produce evil results. But Solomon carried the evil to alarming dimensions (3), in direct disobedience to the express command of God (Deut. xvii. 17); choosing wives from those idolatrous nations against whom God had uttered his warning (2). Evil associations of all kinds are bound to produce evil results (2 Cor. vi. 14). The first warning this lesson enforces is against the choice of evil companions. Do not say you are proof against them. Unconsciously you are receiving from them some evil seed into the mind, and in after years the terrible harvest is sure.

Note (2) how it progressed. "His heart was not perfect—or entire—with the Lord his God" (4), and he "went not fully after the Lord" (6). His attachment to his idolatrous wives weakens his attachment to God. He does not cast off altogether the worship and authority of God, but he ceases to be whole-hearted. Is not that the second stage? It may not appear very alarming in itself, but something worse is bound to follow. A heart that has known God, and enjoyed Him, finds an awful void when fellowship with Him is lost. And if he does not return, then he descends to depths which seemed impossible before. If evil associations weaken a boy's attachment to Sunday-school, something else is sure to take its place. If this result is already appearing, there are only two alternatives; either to return to a more whole-hearted devotion to God, or a still more disastrous wandering from Him. Note (3) to what it led. His heart was first turned after other gods (4), then his life soon followed. Ashtoreth, described as the ancient Venus of the Greeks, worshipped with lascivious rites; Milcolm, or Molech (7), of the Ammonites, with whose worship child sacrifices were connected; Chemosh, of Moab, the sun-god—these were preferred to the God who had so favoured and honoured Solomon. Even the Mount of Olives was disgraced by the presence of these heathen altars (7). Who would have thought that Solomon's polygamy, hardly accounted a sin in those days, would have led to such results as these! The nose of the camel in the miller's hut seemed a harmless intrusion, but it led to disastrous consequences. "It's only a little thing"; "Everybody does it"—these are the little leaks which soon sink the vessel.

(2) The Lord's anger (9—13).—Remember, the Lord can be angry; but his anger is not like that ungovernable passion which sometimes possesses men. He does not cease to love even those whose sins provoke Him. Our hope lies in taking sides with God against our sin, and being angry against it too (2 Cor. vii. 11). In Solomon's case there was greater reason for God's wrath; for he had sinned, in spite of the two occasions when God had appeared to him (9). He had received the most convincing evidence that the Lord was God (iii. 5, ix. 2). Idolatry in him was a direct insult to God, and was ingratitude of the guiltiest type. Besides this, he had deliberately disobeyed God's warning command, given on both these occasions. He had broken through restraining barriers which God had carefully put around him. No wonder that God was angry. Let us be thankful that we have to deal with a God who does not make light of our sin. He hates, and is angry with sin, while He chastens us in love (Ps. lxxxix. 30—34). The judgment was mingled with mercy (11—13). The next lesson deals more particularly with the consequences of his sin.

Learn: (1) What terrible possibilities of evil are in even the best of men.

(2) To what awful results little sins may lead.

(3) Previous favour of God does not excuse, but only aggravates our sin.

(4) What an evil thing and bitter it is to depart from the living God (Jer. ii. 19).

Appeals.

AT this season of the year the urgent calls for help from Christians in different departments of work are multiplied to such an extent that our crowded columns cannot receive them in any detail. We are, therefore, driven to the briefest possible mention of the needs which the following reveal, merely adding that all of them relate to genuine endeavours which are worthy of public support. For further information we must refer our readers to the addresses given:—

There are upwards of a thousand poor families identified with the King Edward-street Ragged Schools and Mission, Spitalfields. Widows and orphans, and dinnerless school children are comforted and cared for in some measure, during the winter season. Hon. superintendent, Mr. Charles Montague, 4, Bedford-square, E.

The poor parents and scholars of the Gibraltar-walk Mission School, cornected with the Shoreditch Tabernacle, are made happy at Christmas time by teas, &c. Communications to Mr. A. H. Tyler, 8, Penn-street, Hyde-road, Hoxton, N.

Rev. Brewin Grant, vicar of St. Paul's, Bethnal Green, E., writes: "Besides specialities for the aged sick and suffering, food, fuel, and clothing for known cases of want are often needed. Our Christmas dinners, for children and adults, have brightened that day for many."

In connection with Spillers-court Mission, Webber-row, Waterloo-road, articles of clothing are given at Christmas time to poor children. Gifts will be thankfully received by Ernest Gentle, 55, George-street, Camberwell-park, S.E.

Rev. W. Evans Hurndall, 16, Cottage-grove, Bow-road, E., is anxious to provide on Christmas Day, fare for ten thousand of the poor of East London. The feast will be in the homes of the people, where all the members of the household can share the enjoyment without restraint. To many the year has been very trying and painful, so that a little Christmas sunshine will be specially welcome.

The cries of hundreds of starving little children, and the appeal of heart-crushed men and women, daily reach the ears of Rev. J. Rolfe Fisher (26, Cottage-grove, Bow, E.), minister of Burdett-road Congregational Church. The mission and relief work are wholly unpaid, and as a consequence of the recent strike there is deep poverty.

Efforts are made, in connection with the Howard-street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth-road, to feed the hungry and clothe the naked. A good Gospel work is carried on. Address, Mr. John Soames, 14, Courland-grove, Larkhall-lane, Clapham, S.W.

The Female Outcast Free Shelter, Harlow House, 34, Mile-end-road, conducted on Christian principles, sadly requires the support of the benevolent. There is accommodation for about eighty inmates. Several young women have passed from the Shelter into Homes, whilst others have been helped in various ways. Mr. Frank Smith, 72, Mark-lane, E.C.

Mr. John Shrimpton, of the Homes for Working Girls in London, appeals for gifts towards paying the expenses incurred in the founding of Domgay House, 11, Fitzroy-street, W. The house was opened ten months ago, a friend having given £2190 towards the establishment. Like the other houses, its record has been one of blessing to many a young woman. The unpaid bills amount to £1600. Mr. Shrimpton's address is Westminster Chambers, 3, Victoria-street, S.W.

A hall in Eldon-road, Walthamstow, is about to be opened in connection with the Juvenile Mission. About £20 is wanted to furnish the building. Mr. E. H. Lamb, Mission-grove, Walthamstow.

Rev. J. Fletcher Porter, 362, Old Ford-road, Bow, E., writes: "We are greatly in need of funds for the work of the Feed the Hungry Society." The all-round excellence of the work of this Society is widely acknowledged.

Contributions of money, cast-off clothing, b coverings, &c., will be thankfully acknowledged Rev. D. M. Cameron, Thurlow House, 515, Wan worth-road, S.W. The workers of the Uni Tabernacle are brought face to face with ma cases of need on the part of deserving people.

Earnest endeavours are being made to reach t fallen women in St. Matthew's parish, Toxtet park, Liverpool. The poor and wretched are al very numerous, and devoted labourers seek to ca for them. Communications to Olive A. Der deaconess, 19, Falkner-street, Hope-street, Live pool.

Miss Lee's Home for Motherless Little Gir Hurst-road, Eastbourne, sadly requires mo friends. Miss Lee writes: "During the past fe weeks I have often not known how the next day food was to be paid for. My house is again fille and I am quite unprepared for the extra expen of the winter season."

Mr. George Fuller, of the East-end Gosp Mission, writes: "Our funds are entirely e hausted." The varied and solid character of th work of the Mission is widely known. Mr. Fuller address is Brunswick Hall, Brunswick-roa Poplar, E.

Help will be welcome towards an endeavou which Rev. T. J. Hazzard (14, Lawrence-roa Bow, E.) is organising for the relief and comfo of poor widows and children in the neighbourhoo of Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common.

Christmas cards and other suitable presents fo school children will be thankfully received b Rev. C. Parkhurst Baxter, chaplain of the Lam beth Industrial Schools, West Norwood, S.E., wh has under his care over seven hundred childre He also appeals for cards and fruit for distribu tion among the inmates of the Central Londo Sick Asylum, Cleveland-street, W.

It is hoped to be able to soothe many of th respectable poor in the West Central District o London. Rev. J. E. Shephard, the energeti superintendent of the Baptist Forward Move ment, will be glad to hear from helpers, who wil also remember the children at the coming festiv season. Address, 37, Frederick-street, Gray's-inn road, W.C.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS. — Miss Mason so well known as the Government inspector o boarded-out children, is endeavouring to persuad ladies not to wear birds in their bonnets, or an feathers except those of ostriches, which can b extracted without pain.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—This week is being observed by evangelical Christians all over the world as the annual week of prayer on behalf o missions and missionaries to all non-Christian peoples and lands. The Church's duty concerning the evangelisation of the heathen was the theme o sermons in all parts of the country last Lord's Day

FOREIGN MISSIONARIES ON FURLOUGH.—A house has just been taken in London to provide comfortable and inexpensive accommodation fo missionaries who are at home for a short rest The rooms will be let furnished, two or three together as required, at a small weekly rental according to size and position. The plan has been warmly welcomed by those for whom it is intended and one family is in the house already, but it is not sufficiently furnished at present, and a little more money is needed to complete it. When once started, it will be self-supporting. Anyone wishing for further information can obtain it by communicating with Mrs. W. S., Kentwins Wood, South Nutfield, Redhill, Surrey.

LOWESTOFT SAILORS' AND FISHERMENS' MISSION.—It is thirty-nine years since this Mission was established, and, through many changes, repeated and very cheering tokens of God's favour and blessing have been received. In addition to the regular services in the Bethel, the Gospel has been preached in the open air hundreds of times to many thousands of listeners. Not only is there a growing moral improvement among the seafaring community, but instances of spiritual awakening are continually encouraging the workers. There are now sailing out of Lowestoft eight Sabbath-keeping luggers connected with the "Bethel Union." The masters of these vessels are all Christian men, seeking the good of their fellows. The Bethel is a centre of much really good work in Lowestoft, and we trust it will be generously supported in its testimony.

Obituary.

MR. ANDREW YOUNG.

THE author of the favourite hymn, "There is a happy land," expired at his residence in Edinburgh on Saturday. He was eighty-two years of age, and the author of a volume of poems. Once head master of Madras College, St. Andrews, he had lived in retirement during the past fifteen years.

COUNT LOUIS JULES DELABORDE.

This servant of God finished his course at Lausanne on November 19, at the age of eighty-three. In France he was held in high esteem as a defender of the faith, and widely known as author of the biography of Admiral de Coligny. Humble in mind, he was full of good works. His last words were: "The Lord is with me."

MR. MARTIN F. TUPPER, F.R.S.

The well-known author of "Proverbial Philosophy" died last week, in his eightieth year. He was a voluminous writer, and his works exercised a wholesome as well as a wide influence. It has been computed that, in less than a quarter of a century, the circulation of "Proverbial Philosophy" was upwards of 100,000 copies in England, and nearly 500,000 in America, while it was also translated into several European languages.

MRS. WILLIAM TERRETT, BRISTOL.

Great consternation was caused at a temperance meeting recently at Bristol by the sudden death of Mrs. William Terrett, the wife of a member of the Bristol Town Council. She had just finished addressing the gathering, and her daughter was singing, when Mrs. Terrett fell back insensible. A surgeon was summoned, but she was dead on his arrival. Her husband was with her on the platform. Mrs. Terrett was well known as an active temperance advocate, and several years ago she was General of the White Ribbon Army, which at that time carried on a spirited temperance crusade in the West of England.

Personalia.

Mr. Charles Inglis, after a brief period of successful Gospel work in America, is now on his way back to England, which he hopes to reach this week.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, accompanied by his son, Dr. Taylor, is on a visit to Sweden. They have addressed large assemblies on the subject of China Missions, and have been received by the Queen at Stockholm.

Mr. Spurgeon, who is staying at Mentone, is suffering from loss of voice. He is in good spirits, however, for in a letter which was read at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Sunday, he said: "I send warm Christian salutations to all that army of friends who are with me in the work of our Lord. It is a heaven below to remember your love."

The late Dr. Horatius Bonar.—It would give great gratification to the family of Dr. H. Bonar to have the privilege of seeing letters of spiritual counsel and help which he may have written to correspondents. It is uncertain whether any use could be made of such letters, except a private one, but the family request as a favour that the possessors of any such would communicate with them at once: Letters sent will be carefully returned. They will also be glad to get copies of any of Dr. Bonar's unpublished hymns.—Address, Mr. H. N. Bonar, 10, Palmerston-road, Grange, Edinburgh.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn, of St. James's, Hatcham, sailed last week for a six months' visit to Lagos, Sierra Leone, and other places on the Western Coast of Africa. A large congregation gathered at his church on Thursday evening, last week, and gave him a hearty and affectionate God-speed; the service lasted over three hours, including the observance of "Holy Communion," in which nearly 500 persons participated. Mr. Selwyn addressed words of parting cheer to his people, exhorting them to be stedfast in their work during his absence. A very suitable and practical sermon was delivered by Rev. W. H. Barlow, of Islington, and at the close of the long service almost every one present shook hands with the vicar. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait of Mr. Selwyn, and a sketch of his ministerial career.

CLARKE'S

"PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE at LITTLEHAMPTON—CONSUMPTION following HÆMORRHAGE.

The patient whose case is here given called upon me three years ago. Two years before that he had a severe attack of hæmorrhage, which much weakened him, and laid the foundation of the disease with which he suffered at the time he heard of me. He corresponded with me; got better; left off the treatment too soon, and consequently relapsed; commenced again, and finally recovered.

Six months after this I received a letter from him of which the following is an extract:—"Your medicine has been such a blessing to me, I thought I would write to you. Having had occasion recently to undergo a thorough examination, the physician said that if he had not understood that I had suffered from phthisis, he should have passed me without suspecting anything, and that the lungs were evidently healed. Make any use of my case, except the insertion of my name, &c. I should be pleased to write to any one."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

CADBURY'S

REFRESHING COCOA SUSTAINING

CADBURY'S COCOA is closely allied to milk in the large proportion of flesh-forming and strength-sustaining elements that it contains. It is prepared on the principle of excluding the superabundance of fatty indigestible matter with which cocoa abounds—supplying a refined thin infusion of absolutely pure cocoa, exhilarating and refreshing, for Breakfast, Luncheon, Tea, or Supper—giving staying power and imparting new life and vigour to growing children, and those of delicate constitutions.

Drawn from Life by] FEEDING THE HUNGRY. [R. Barnes, Esq.

The Help of those who have the joy of being accounted God's stewards, is earnestly asked on behalf of the Flower Girl Mission, labouring among the Poorest of London Street Poor.

The winter is a time of terrible trials and temptations to the Women and Girls engaged in the Street Sale of Flowers.

They attend the Early Morning Markets, and are found late at night outside Music Halls, Theatres, and such places. Their Flowers soon perish, and they are often reduced to actual want: then the temptations of the Drink and the Streets become exceedingly fierce.

It will be seen that in addition to all the Spiritual Efforts put forth by the Mission, the Temporal Work is growing. The Girls and Women are met in Markets by the Missionary at 5 o'clock in the Morning, and to the needy a Breakfast is served. The Streets are Patrolled at Night, and those in need are helped in various ways: either the Faded Stock is Purchased, or Food taken to the Family, or help rendered by the Shaftesbury Loan Fund, for Fresh Stock on the Morrow. The Homeless are provided with Temporary Shelter, the Young Girl of 12 or 14 is received into the Brigade to be Trained for Service or other safe spheres of life. The little Waifs and Strays are received into our Homes, and thus effectually Rescued from the Dangers of the Streets.

Funds are most Urgently Needed, and will be gratefully received and acknowledged if sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, or to the Hon. Superintendent, JOHN A. GROOM, 8, Seckforde Street, Clerkenwell, E.C.

Being a Collection of 431 Bible Subjects

SUITABLE FOR

BIBLE READINGS AND GOSPEL ADDRESSES.

By CHARLES INGLIS,

EVANGELIST.

Price 2s. Cloth boards, bevelled edges.

"The object of this volume is to help those who seek to speak for the Lord Jesus, and yet have little time at their disposal for the preparation of their message. Most of these Bible Readings it has been my privilege to deliver to thousands of workers in all parts of the world; and many of my hearers, who have received blessing and profit, have urged me to issue them in a printed form.

"We have gone through some thousands of references with a great deal of care, but should our readers find a blemish here or there, they will remember that many of these Bible Readings have been searched out on long railway journeys and ocean voyages.

"Should this volume be the means of stirring up any to search the precious Word of God, in these days when its fundamental truths are being denied, we shall feel that our labours have not been in vain."

A Devoted Life.

BY REV. JOHN MACPHERSON,

Author of "Henry Moorhouse, the English Evangelist"; "Duncan Matheson, the Scottish Evangelist"; "The Christian Hero, Memoir of Robert Annan"; "Revival and Revival Work"; &c., &c.

With Mezzotype Portrait.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of reading. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. It is the history of a real woman, who in the course of her life spoke about the tremendous business of the soul to upwards of twenty thousand persons, one by one. . . . We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting biography. Mothers should place it in the hands of their daughters. It would be a splendid Christmas present from a Sunday school teacher to his class, or a good prize for Sunday-school children."
Irish Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

"With refined tastes and exquisite sensibilities, with a fascinating presence and a gracious winsomeness of manner that would have made her a favourite in good society, she preferred for Christ's sake to mingle with the poor, and be as one of them. Rather than cut a figure in high quarters, she would be 'oor freen Eesabell,' in the slums. Vanity in every form she abhorred."—Extract from Page 190.

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 21,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity, arising from the recent Dock Labourers' Strike and other causes; and from present appearances an unusually severe season is most certainly apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

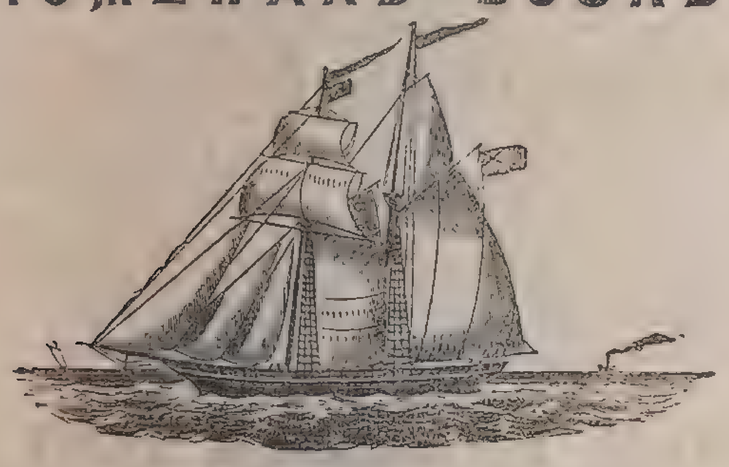
Edinburgh Industrial Home

FOR FALLEN WOMEN,

ALNWICK HILL, near LIBERTON.



THE premises so long occupied by this HOME, where so much good work has been done in the past, have become so dilapidated that it has become absolutely necessary to provide a new building. To erect a plain but substantial building such as required the Committee find it will be necessary to provide not less than £4,500. The need is very urgent, and already upwards of £2,100 has been subscribed; but an earnest appeal for help is made to those who have not as yet contributed. A detailed printed statement of the case and list of contributions will be sent to any who may desire to have further information.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE,
GRAY'S INN ROAD, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an URGENT APPEAL FOR IMMEDIATE HELP.

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

SCRIPTURE READERS' SOCIETY FOR IRELAND.

Established 1822.

FOR the purpose of employing humble Christian men well versed in the Scriptures to visit and read the Bible throughout Ireland. The Scripture Readers are invariably placed under carefully selected Christian Superintendents, and are also employed by the Society in the large towns and cities as City Missionaries, and visit all denominations, where permitted. Irish-speaking Readers are sent to Irish-speaking districts when required, but are now seldom asked for. The work is carried on in a spirit of love, and not of controversy.

The Scripture Readers also visit amongst the Sailors in seaports and hold Bethel Meetings on board Ships, at hours not to interfere with the usual Public Services. The Society is supported by voluntary contributions.

OFFICES—27, LOWER PEMBROKE STREET, DUBLIN; and 9, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

Full particulars, reports, &c., can be obtained post free on application to the Secretary, Capt. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE.

NOTE.—Donations may be sent to the above addresses, or will be received by the Proprietors of "THE CHRISTIAN."

Friends will please notice the exact title, "Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland," and not "Irish Scripture Readers' Society."

FEEDING THE HUNGRY.

☞ WHO WILL HELP to give a good DINNER, ON CHRISTMAS DAY, to TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY POOR BOYS, gathered from the poorest streets in Deptford?

Contributions gladly received by Mr. H. A. PUNNETT, care of J. W. C. Fegan, Esq., Boys' Home, 95, Southwark-street, S.E.; or to H. A. PUNNETT, 85, Gosterwood-street, Deptford, S.E.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

President :—GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq.

This Society supports Bethels, Sailors' Rests, Reading-rooms, Schools, Mission Boats, and Bible Carriage.

It employs twenty missionaries and agents among Seamen and Fishermen in London and twenty other ports.

It carries on a large Gospel-Temperance work, provides ships with Loan Libraries, Corresponds with Seamen abroad, and affords relief to distressed Seamen.

The work has been signally blessed throughout this year, and has resulted in the conversion of large numbers of Seamen, and the reclamation of many of the intemperate.

Owing to enlargement of the work and the purchase of a new Sailors' Rest the banking account is overdrawn to the amount of nearly £600!

Help is therefore most urgently needed, and will be gratefully received, by GEORGE JOHN HILL, Secretary, 255, Burdett-road, Limehouse, E.; or, by Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, at the Offices of THE CHRISTIAN.

The Christian.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Professor Elmslie.

We have received several communications in reply to the "Modern Apostolical Epistle" which appeared in our last. We think it better to hold them until next week, when we will epitomise them, with any other letters, on either side, which may reach us in the meantime.

A writer in The Manchester Courier, who has been contributing papers upon the social and industrial features of the United States, recently gave some painful statistics of the condition of working women in that country, the number of whom is estimated at more than half a million. Details are given of the semi-starvation wages and harsh treatment meted out to shop-girls, scarf-makers, box-makers, corset-makers, cigarette-makers, sewing girls, and shirt-makers. From these it would appear that all the "sweating," starvation, and oppression which exist in this country are paralleled, if not exceeded, across the Atlantic.

By the time our next issue appears, that indefatigable worker, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, will have entered upon his "jubilee year." Commencing at the age of sixteen, our esteemed brother has for thirty-four years been engaged in active service for the Master, and hundreds have been led to Christ through his ministry of the word. Our readers are familiar with the Evangelistic Mission and the newly-opened House of Rest at St. Leonards, and the other good works associated with Mr. Hurditch's name. No less than £1000 are needed for general current expenses of the Mission in all its branches, to clear it of debt by Dec. 31. Further supplies are needed to redeem the mortgages of the halls at Forest Gate and Swindon; and towards the erection of two new halls, for which conditional promises have been made. We think that many of our readers will like to show their fellowship in a specially practical way at this exceptional point of an eminently useful life.

Mr. J. A. Froude has been interviewed by a representative of The Pall Mall Gazette, and in the course of the conversation he made the following significant remarks:—

SCIENCE, FAITH, AND SCEPTICISM.

"Remember this: a man of genius is tired of always breaking down. He wants to find Truth, not fault....But nowadays it is all disintegration. Science will not do humanity much good, in these matters at all events. It won't construct. It doesn't touch human nature. It is quite outside of it. Science only deals with generals, but religion goes to the heart of the individual; and so I feel that on this basis religion is absolutely impregnable against all the assaults of science. All that is grand, sublime, of benefit to the race, has come out of Faith and not out of Scepticism. Scepticism never yet did any grand or noble work."

PROTESTANTISM ASLEEP: ROME CHANGELESS.

"It has been a great concern to me to see the Liberal party, the descendants of the Long Parliament, throwing over the Reformation and working with the Roman Catholics. Macaulay and others are always throwing mud at the Reformers, half a million of whom gave up their lives for the hope of England. But that magnificent intellectual Protestantism is for ever dead. The spirit that inspired Cromwell and William of Orange, oh! that spirit has altogether died out...The Church of Rome never will benefit the great mass of thinking people...Rome and her doctrines have never changed, and they never will. The Pope—I do not, of course, refer to individuals—but the Pope, in the very nature of things, is the Father of Lies; how, then, can he be what your Special Commissioner hopes he will be?...The Pope cannot, in my opinion, ever be the Father of Christendom in any beneficent sense."

The reports of the Manchester Autumn Art Gallery, containing statistics relating to Sunday attendance, are not very encouraging to Sunday Societies. In 1886 there were for the last four Sundays of the year, 39,942 visitors; this figure fell down more than ten thousand for the last five Sundays of the following year, and almost ten thousand less still on four Sundays of 1888. It will also be found, as we once ascertained on inquiry in another city, that not a few of those who do go to these picture galleries on the Sabbath are young men and women who want a meeting-place during the winter on a Sunday afternoon. And why should attendants be required to give up their weekly day of rest for these?

With regard to the controversy in The Times upon the length of sermons (to which we recently alluded in brief) it may be remarked that the real fault seems to lie with the subject-matter of discourses. In too many pulpits there is a marked absence of plain Gospel teaching: a cold essay, cultured and polished it may be, is made to do duty for a soul-searching discourse. Little fragments of the everlasting Gospel are doled out. There is too often nothing to reach the hearts and satisfy the yearnings of men who have been toiling all the week. God's hungry sheep look up, and are not fed. The trumpet gives an uncertain sound, and the doubt arises, "Is the preacher truly converted? Does he really feel that he has a message from God?" One of The Times' correspondents thinks that "religious teaching is bound to conform to the spirit of the time." Nay; it is not a new Gospel that is required in these days, but that the old Gospel should be proclaimed with greater directness and faithfulness; more earnestness, more life are needed. An old test of a Gospel sermon is, "Does it humble the sinner, exalt Christ, promote holiness?" Tried by this standard, how many sermons would be "found wanting!"

Is it not humiliating to find such an instance of un-Christian intolerance as is displayed in a pamphlet, entitled, "Suggestions to Irish Churchmen," presumably for circulation in the sister island, where of late there has been some little agitation in relation to Ritualism in Dublin and in one or two smaller towns? The writer, who contents himself with the use of the initials H. I. C., says:—

> The Protestant Nonconformists are no living branch of the Church. By their separation they are living in sin, and can have no certainty of salvation....Where men are not bound to Christ by valid sacraments there can be no certainty of salvation, and, as there are no valid sacraments outside the Church, there can be no certainty of salvation outside the Church....Of course, this statement does not refer to the heathen, but only to those who have heard the truth, and have opportunity of accepting it.

A passage like this needs no comment; we can but hope that the writer will become heartily ashamed of it.

The "Old Catholic" movement has of late obtained little attention. It has not, however, been inactive. In Holland and Germany the Roman Catholics who were hostile to the Vatican decrees, and especially that of Papal Infallibility, have been meeting in distinct congregations, under pastors of their own, and among them are men of eminence in social and professional life. They have been completing their organisation, and we learn from a report, just issued, that an Episcopal Conference has been held this autumn at Utrecht. There are now five bishops who are guiding the movement, and they closed their sitting with fervent thanksgiving, exclaiming, "This is the day that the Lord hath made." We cannot estimate the influence of such a protesting body by a numerical standard. Their witness must tell in their different localities, and must necessarily base itself increasingly on the Scriptures of truth.

Sir William Dawson, in his article in this month's Contemporary Review on "The Deluge—Biblical and Geological," affirms that there are indicated to us in the latest geological formations two distinct human periods which are characterised by an earlier and a later race of men. He also assigns a deep and intended significance to the two kinds of documents—Jehovist and Elohist—found in Genesis. These, he avers, do not prove two different writers, as certain critics contend, but express a radical diversity between the two races of men. The Jehovists had faith in a coming Redeemer, while the Elohists were deists with a worship of the God of nature which degenerated into polytheism, materialism, and wickedness. The diluvial catastrophe followed the mixture of the two races.

Not many years ago a certain school of scientists scornfully treated the history of the Flood as an obvious fiction. It is noteworthy that a great geologist accepts the Biblical account as confirmed by modern discoveries, and congratulates those who adhered to an earlier faith when the current of opinion tended strongly in a contrary direction.

Miss Beatrice Potter commenced in last week's Queen a series of papers on "the sweating system," as applied to women's work. She vividly describes some woful scenes of East-end poverty she has witnessed, and expresses the three essential elements of sweating as low wages, long hours, and overcrowding. She declares, however, that the execrated "middleman" is rapidly disappearing, but that the wholesale manufacturer now gives out work on the same starvation terms as before, while he pockets the commission that used to go into the pocket of the contractor. Miss Potter says:—

> As the earth teems with parasites, ready to feed on disorganised matter, so the world is full of hard-hearted, unscrupulous men, ready to take advantage of unorganised labour.

The writer's remedy appears to be co-operation among working women, and this is what is aimed at by the recently formed "Women's Trades Union." We commend these articles, written from the standpoint of personal investigation, to the notice of social economists and philanthropists.

An interesting paper in the current number of Scribner's Magazine, under the heading of "How the Other Half Lives," deals with the questions of poverty and overcrowding, but this time it is not the East-end of London that furnishes the subject. New York, it would appear, is even a greater offender than is the English Metropolis in respect to carelessness as to the housing of its poor. One district in the former city is said to contain 290,000 people to the square mile, as compared with 170,000, the densest crowding in London. The most suggestive lesson of the paper, however, is that which points to the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of helping the people who continue to live in the congested districts, as they "slip back again on the first opportunity." The most cheering fact that the writer puts forward is in regard to the number of "sweet and innocent girls" who live untouched by the evil around them in these infamous and miserable localities.

The responsibility of society in regard to such a condition of things is clearly and painfully shown by the statistics of a cholera-epidemic during which the death-rate in the crowded districts rose to 195 per thousand. In the face of such figures, to say nothing of those in regard to crime and vice, it is the duty of Christians to do all in their power to prevent the movements which are originated from time to time for the reduction of the evils from becoming merely spasmodic.

So much stress is very properly laid on the shameful waste upon intoxicating drinks that little attention is paid to the corresponding waste upon tobacco. Yet the cost of the tobacco now annually imported into these islands is nearly three millions. With duty and taxation, the profits of the retailer, &c., the smoking bill of Great Britain and Ireland reaches the sum of £16,000,000, or nearly £3 per head for each adult male of the entire population. The results may not be so terrible as those which follow the settlement of the drink bill, but the fact that in the face of abounding poverty and destitution such an amount should be worse than wasted is one to send us to our knees.

THE PRESS ON DR. BARNARDO.

QUITE a stir seems to have arisen amongst the parents of the children now in Dr. Barnardo's Homes, several of whom are now endeavouring to remove them from his care. He has, therefore, been obliged to insist upon the fulfilment of the agreement which binds any parent who removes a child without the consent of the managers, and before the time stated in the agreement has expired, to pay at the rate of five or six shillings a week for the term of maintenance.

In a leading article upon this, The Daily Chronicle fairly and wisely says:—"Timid relatives of the boys should bear in mind that the late Lord Cairns was a warm friend of the Homes. He was a great lawyer, of shrewd intelligence, and he and other notable persons formed a high estimate of Dr. Barnardo—an estimate which precludes the notion that he does not watch well and wisely over the children.

"Then the prime movers in the outcry are probably ecclesiastical foes of the Homes. Some of them should be among the last to throw stones because the doctor cannot immediately lay hands on a child gone forth from his establishment. If their present indignation is not simulated, they would, perhaps, allow any relative to take from convent or nunnery a child immured there at any moment. It is right to be suspicious of everything that looks like a wanton infringement of the authority of the home; but we doubt whether there is any real cause of alarm when the foremost champions of the privileges of fathers and mothers are men not too careful of parental rights where heir own religious organisations are concerned."

The Echo, which is clearly not a partisan of Dr. Barnardo, but whose judicious articles are often a pleasing contrast to the sensationals of some of its compeers, had the following sober and sensible remarks in a leaderette in its issue of Monday evening:—

"In an ideal condition of society every parent would be compelled to support his or her children, if able to do so; and if permanently unable, by reason of illness or some other sufficient cause, the State should step in and care for the child. However, we have to deal, not with the ideal but with the actual, and Dr. Barnardo's large family consists of nearly three thousand inmates at various Homes in England and the Colonies, on which the benevolent public now expend nearly a hundred thousand pounds a year.

"Ever since some Roman Catholics enabled two women, whose children had been left neglected and destitute, to demand them to be given up, Dr. Barnardo has been worried with a number of similar demands on the part of other parents. This is exactly what we said would happen. It is absurd to speak of Dr. Barnardo as though he were a ruthless, heartless person, who takes delight in keeping child and mother apart. The question at issue is whether parents, who have abandoned or ill-treated their children, so that they were either homeless, or worse than homeless, after allowing charitable people to feed and clothe and house them for years, shall be able, as soon as the child is old enough to become a bread-winner, to go and take the child away from an asylum, thus undoing the moral work of years, and turning the very instruction which the child has gained, into an opportunity for the further gratification of the parents' idleness or drunkenness. We have already freely expressed the opinion that Dr. Barnardo must not set himself up against the law; but, in the interests of the children themselves, the law of adoption should be altered without delay."

We much regret that we are unable this week to report the important meeting at Exeter Hall, last Tuesday night. We earnestly hope that all our readers and Christians generally are aware that the difficulties so wantonly thrown in the way of the institutions of Dr. Barnardo and others, are but a part of the Romish conspiracy to re-establish itself in this country.

MR. SPURGEON ON PROVERBS.

MR. SPURGEON has published the second volume of his collection of Proverbs.* Three things, according to the Pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, go to the making of a Proverb: Shortness, Sense, and Salt. There is much excellent sense in brief in these "salt cellars." This work not only bears evidence of the sound judgment of the compiler, but also of his healthy humour. Some extracts from the second volume will give an idea of the general contents:—

Make matters of care matters of prayer.—This is the wisdom of the anxious. To lay the matter before the Lord is to take the sting out of trial.

Never is a long day.—Therefore it is well not to vow so indefinitely, for we may change our mind. Moreover, it is wise never to despair, or say that we shall never be happy again; for after a while things will look brighter.

Nothing is simpler than faith, and nothing more sublime.—Faith is simple from the human side: it is a childlike trust. But it is sublime from the Divine side, since it grasps the Invisible, and has power with the Omnipotent.

Omission of good is commission of evil.—In other words, "omitted duty is committed sin." How this should humble us when making confession of sin! Who can measure what we might have done, and should have done?

Patience and water-gruel cure many diseases.—Of all prescriptions this is the most reliable, and practically this is the point to which doctors are coming. A little starving is very useful treatment. Grantham gruel is recommended: nine grits and a gallon of water will not overload the stomach.

Sinners fare the better for saints.—Laban confessed that he had learned by experience that the Lord had blessed him for Jacob's sake. So we read, "The Lord blessed the Egyptian's house for Joseph's sake." As Bishop Hall says: "His very presence procures a common blessing: a whole family shall fare the better for one Joseph."

The devil leads him by the nose, who the dice so often throws.—Gambling is so silly a vice, that it is fair to say that its votary is led by the nose; and it is so ruinous, that surely Satan must have a special hand in it. The ancients say, "The devil goes shares in gaming"; and yet again, "Play hath the devil at the bottom of it." Yet the devil does not demean himself to play.

Who prays in grief, secures relief.—And then he must take care to give glory to God for the gracious answer to prayer which has been vouchsafed to him.

> Prayers and praises go in pairs:
> They have praises who have prayers.

To public speakers these goodly volumes will prove a rich mine of suggestion and illustration.

* THE SALT CELLARS: Being a collection of Proverbs together with Homely Notes thereon. By C. H. Spurgeon. Vol. ii. M. to Z. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster

WELCOME HOME, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—The winter's work is being carried on vigorously. At a meeting last week of the Christian Lifeboat Crew, helpful addresses were delivered by several friends, and cheering testimonies given by seafaring members. Prayer was asked for the branches and representatives in foreign ports. The unloading of the Christmas boat will take place on December 28.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—PRAISE: For blessing on a mission at Ross, by Mr. Opie Rodway.——PRAYER: For blessing on a mission at Poulton, near Fairford, Dec. 14 to 17, by Mr. Opie Rodway.——For blessing on mission services at Sprowston Parish Church, Norwich, Dec. 7 onwards, by Rev. Walter Bradbury.——For blessing on special Gospel services, to be held weekly during the winter, in the village of Briz Norton, Oxon.——For a fifteen days' mission being conducted at Southall, Middlesex, by Mr. George Hefford.

The Priesthood of Christ.

BY REV. C. CLEMANCE, B.A., D.D.

"SUCH A HIGH PRIEST."—Heb. vii. 26.

As the word "priest" is used in Scripture, it for the most part denotes one who stands in some sort between God and man, enjoying a nearer access to God than that with which some others are privileged, and securing their access to God by virtue of his own.

It is quite in harmony with the analogy of nature, that in the bestowment of blessings on man, and even in intercourse with man, God should act through a mediator. We do not say that Nature actually teaches this, for her light is too dim; her rays pierce not far enough into the surrounding darkness. But, so far as nature has aught to tell us, the doctrine of mediation quite accords with her teachings.

We are constantly receiving blessings from Heaven through the medium of some intervening person or object, e.g., light from the sun; sustenance in earliest life from those who gave us birth. In providence, God works through media. He is the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Yet few, if any, of the gifts we enjoy are otherwise than traceable to some human instrumentality. In fact, what is Nature, but God speaking to us and working for us through Nature, and so unfolding his natural laws? What is Providence, but God, through the medium of a succession of events, showing us the order of his natural and moral government? Similarly we ask, What is grace, i.e., the economy of grace, but God working in and for men through the medium of One Person, and so unfolding his nature and the laws of his spiritual government? Since God, the eternal ground of all phenomena, reveals Himself through them, each set of phenomena discloses that part of his nature which has to do with them. Hence, while the collocation of things may show power and skill, while the structure of human nature and of society may reveal moral law, yet (so far as we know) it is only through a Person that God can reveal his nature, his will, his heart! We may understand a workman's skill by seeing a piece of his handiwork, but we must see him in the midst of his family if we would learn what he is as a father. So, we may learn of God's wisdom, power, and skill from the works of his hand; we may learn his righteousness from the sure and certain penalty that follows sin, but if we want to know his inner self, his heart of hearts, we can do that only through the Son of his love!

Nor is this the only consideration which prepares us to see the reasonableness and appropriateness of a mediatorial administration. Some mediation, so far as we can see, might have been needed, even if man had never sinned. But the entrance of sin into the world has obviously rendered necessary some features in such mediation which otherwise would not have been required.

MAN NEEDS A PRIEST.

Hence we find that mediation in the form of a priesthood is in accordance with the all but universal promptings of human nature. The employment of priests—even sacrificing priests—among the people of other religions seems to indicate to us some deep need felt by men of a Mediator. The feeling which prompted Israel to say: "Speak thou with us and we will hear; but let not God speak with us lest we die," is one which most can well understand. For not only because of our dim vision do we need one as a Revealer, to "show us the Father," but because of our guilt we need one who can fittingly undertake to lead us up to Him, and through whom we may have, notwithstanding our sin, a right to the Father, though our sin is adequately condemned; and a freedom of spirit to approach the Father, while a penitential reverence is adequately insured, i.e., we need a priest—a great high priest who can be our advocate with God; and our one aim in these papers will be to show that the Lord Jesus Christ is the Priest we need. "Such a High Priest became us."

But this phrase—"Such a High Priest"—brief as it is, is so expressive, so beautiful, and is, withal, one that includes so much, that we despair of adequately setting it forth in the brief space at our command. To do that would require a volume. We can but touch on some ten or twelve features of the Lord Jesus Christ as a Priest, that thus we may show

HOW FULLY HE MEETS OUR NEED.

(1) Because of his own twofold nature as the Son of God and the Son of Man, He is to us the perfect Representative of the Father, while He is, to the Father, the perfect representative of man. He is the first, in the only form in which we could feel that He touched us; He is the second, in the only form in which sinful men could have access to a Holy God. Twice in this Epistle is the verb "to become" used in reference to the Saviour and his work. Once in chap. ii. 10, "It became Him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings." Again, in chap. vii. 26, "Such a High Priest became us." Obviously the second stands or falls with the first. For only a mediator who is suitable for the Father to appoint can be in all respects suited to our need. In both respects is Jesus the fitting Mediator. He is the only begotten Son of the Father, He by whom the ages were made, in whom all things stand together. He is the brightness of the Father's glory, the express image of his person. He was with the Father before time began. In the immeasurable past, ere one of the billions of planets began to roll, before the first speck of star-dust was formed, then had He existed with the Father from eternity; He was then, the Son of his Love, the infinite and perfect expression of the Invisible One: and hence, when He clothed Himself with our nature and limited his manifestation therein, He became to us an absolutely perfect revelation of the eternal Father. So that when we look at Him we see photographed as it were to the miniature scale of human measurement the express copy of the Infinite and viewless God! Hence He could say, "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

JESUS OUR FITTING REPRESENTATIVE.

(2) Because of our Lord coming to be in the race, and yet over it, He is the fitting representative of the human family. By his incarnation He inserted Himself into the race, while yet by his unique position as the Son of God, He was Lord over it. Thus, as the Head of every man, he could be the Representative of man. This principle of Pepresentation is surely familiar enough to us. The head of a house may represent the house. The eldest son in a family may represent the family. A mayor may represent a borough, a governor a colony, a primate a church, a sovereign a realm, an emperor an empire, but only one who was over all mankind could represent a world! But Jesus could. Save according to the flesh, He is of no nation, for in a sense entirely unique; He was "born from above." The little racial and caste distinctions which divide mankind are nothing to Him. He overlooks them all, and cries, "Come unto Me, ALL ye that labour and are heavy laden." "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." So far as earth was concerned, He was a living root out of a dry ground: on earth, yet not dependent on it. He, the one, the only Head of our race, could be, was, and is, our Mediator before the eternal Throne!

WITHOUT SIN.

(3) He is absolutely pure. "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." Under the Mosaic law, Aaron and his sons had to be washed with water; they had also to offer sacrifice, first for their own sins, and then for the people's. Thus, as far as in a type it could be shown, our God would teach the people that the priest, through whom the people were to approach the mercy-seat, must himself be free from guilt. But the perfection of this was seen not in the type, but in the antitype. Our Lord Himself was "without spot." He consented, indeed, in the first stage of his great atoning work to be "numbered with the transgressors," to step into Jordan's stream, to let the cleansing water roll over him, as if He had been the sinner. But it was thus He took up the burden of our sin; and, as the result of his baptism, a flood of light poured in upon his baptizer, so that he who had previously been so terrible, afterwards became so tender, and cried aloud, "Behold the Lamb of God, who is bearing away the sin of the world!" But while our Lord thus took up the burden of our iniquities as if it had been his own, He Himself had none, and the ideal of a perfect priest who had no sins for which to atone, and who could approach God in his own right, was fulfilled in Him and Him alone. His connection with sin was very close, yet from any taint thereof He was absolutely free. So closely indeed did the terrible wrappings of sin gather round his soul, that horrible darkness and anguish seized Him. Yet though the world derided; though friends betrayed, denied, and forsook Him; though the fiery darts of the evil one were hurled at Him again and again—now through suggestions in the wilderness, then through the remonstrance of Peter, and again through the shrinking of the flesh from the cross—still through all He bore up, and pressed onward till the work was done, never swerving in loyalty to the Father nor in fidelity to us. He came forth from the contest scatheless, resisting even unto blood, and yet—WITHOUT SIN!

THE GOSPEL BOOK MISSION TO THE ARMY AND NAVY was instituted in 1873, to receive books, magazines, &c., to be forwarded to friends who undertake the task of gratuitous distribution among seamen and soldiers; also to collect funds for printing tracts and purchasing pure literature for naval and military hospitals, lighthouses, coastguard stations, and reading-rooms afloat and ashore. During last year over two hundred parcels were sent out monthly, nearly one-fourth of them to places abroad. The balance-sheet shows a small deficit. Communications for Mrs. Brider, who superintends the work, should be sent to The Old Gaol Mission-hall, Salisbury.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIII.—GOD'S SLAVES.

1 PETER ii. 16.

IT is very remarkable to notice the frequency and earnestness with which the writers of the New Testament insist on the use of that word "slave," as describing their true relationship to God. It is the favourite designation of the Apostle Paul, "apostle and slave," and he even gloried in wearing the brandmarks of the slavery of Jesus. Not only here, but in the first line of his Second Epistle, the Apostle Peter describes himself in the very same terms. And the Apocalyptic vision of the Apostle John rings with the word, touched with heavenly light, transfigured, glorified. That wondrous book is prepared for slaves; they are the sealed; they receive the rewards; they see God's face and bear his name upon their brows. Heaven takes our most dreaded terms, and makes them sparkle in its own light, till what had seemed the synonym of terror, becomes the target of our noblest aims. The servants of the royal household are nobles.

All this is very singular. For the slavery which throve in the poisoned atmosphere of the pagan world was the most cruel and wicked thing that society has ever seen. The slavery of the Roman empire was slavery at its worst. The slave was the absolute chattel of his owner, for purposes of crushing labour, bitter torture, degrading crime. There was no appeal, no hope of redress, no escape, except by the dread door of death. And yet it is this system which the sacred writers never weary of applying to our relationship to Jesus Christ. It presents them with an ideal which stirs their intensest enthusiasm.

It might have been expected that they would have attacked and denounced it, and grasped this thistle by the hand, to uproot it from the harvest field of the world. But this is not the Divine method. God does not deal with society as a whole, but with individuals one by one; not with the abuses, but with the spirit out of which they arise; not with politics, but with principles. It may be that the Apostles did not realise the certain effect of the work which they did. They went quietly forward, telling out the message of God's love, reminding men that in Christ there was neither slave nor master, insisting that their true position was determined, not by their outward condition, but by their inward temper. And in doing this they were creating a world in which slavery could not live. And perhaps some among us, who do not join in crusades against existing abuses, but concentrate all their energy to bringing individual souls from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, are really doing as much as others to purify and elevate society as a whole. You will best save the world by saving the individuals who go to make it up.

Instead of denouncing slavery they borrowed from it to indicate the disposition of their lives, and interwove it into the fabric of their discourses. And so it shone with a heavenly radiance, as black lowering clouds, drenched in the glow of setting suns, lie along the horizon as bars of gold. It is on this fact, then, that we are God's slaves, that the Apostle founds the exhortations of this paragraph.

I. THE DIVINE DESPOTISM.—This may seem a strong phrase. But it is exactly Scriptural. In the next epistle, the word used of our Master is that from which our word "despot" was coined (2 Pet. ii. 1). And it will serve well our purpose, if it startles us into a recognition of the absoluteness of Christ's authority over his own.

We are too easy in our treatment of our Lord. We call Him Master and Lord, and we say well, for so He is; but we do not realise how much the term involves; nor do we do the things that He says. He is our Captain, and we have to go, or come, or do, not because we see the reasonableness of his commands, but because He utters them. He is our Owner, who has purchased us for a specific purpose, and whose intentions will be frustrated unless He receive from us absolute and exact obedience. He is the Founder of our order, and surely has a right to look for as much from us as the Jesuit demands of his "black-robed militia," each of whom must be "as a staff in a blind man's hand."

God hath exalted Him to be a Prince and a Saviour. We are too prone to reverse the order, and make Him a Saviour and a Prince. And we are apt to think much more of being saved by Him, than of doing as He bids. And it is because we know so little of Jesus as King that we experience so little of Him as Saviour.

It would do us good again to take the Gospels in hand, and carefully study them with the one object of noticing their incessant appeals for obedience. Everything in Christian life hinges on doing as we are told.

> Ours not to reason why,
> Ours not to make reply,
> Ours but to do and die.

The rights of Jesus Christ to exercise this despotic authority are founded on many considerations, on which just now we may not dwell at length. He gave Himself for us, and his supreme gift of Himself for us demands the absolute surrender of ourselves to Him. The blood, which He shed on Calvary, is the price by which we have been bought, and we cannot be other than the property of our purchaser. His rights over us are also founded on the gift made by the Father to the Son, before all worlds, of those who, in the process of time, should come to Him. Besides all which, we have ourselves knelt at his feet professing our desire to be, ever, only, always his; not in part, but in the entire range of spirit, soul, and body. Who then can challenge his right to be despotic? Because He is what He is, in dignity, in character, in infinite grace, in superior knowledge, we may gladly and safely put the entire control of our lives into his hands, yielding an obedience which we dare not give to any creature living, and obeying absolutely, blindly, dumbly.

II. THE EFFECT OF THIS CONCEPTION.—"Submit." See how absolutely the Apostle rivets the collar of obedience on the necks of these scattered saints. They might be disposed to hesitate in their submission to every ordinance of man; but he silences their remonstrances, and makes their yoke easy, by whispering, Submit, for the Lord's sake. They might demand why they should go on in patient well-doing amid the detraction and ignorant opposition of foolish men; but he forecloses every objection, by saying, So is the will of God. They might vaunt their freedom, as having been introduced into a new realm, the tidings of which were beginning to steal through the world, as the first faint breath of spring through the woods; but he met their argument by reminding them that, though they were free, they must not use their liberty as a veil for evil living, because they were the slaves of God.

There are wonderful contrasts in these words. Those who stand erect as the brothers of Christ in the presence of God, are bidden to submit to every ordinance of men. Those who avow their determination to live only in the will of God discover that will working through the appointments of foolish and ignorant men. The freemen of God are his slaves, and therefore the servants of men. So great, and full, and rich is that real life which we may live in communion with God, that we can afford to be very liberal in complying with the demands of the human institutions by which we are surrounded, so far as they do not clash with our allegiance to our Master and Lord.

There is great helpfulness in these words. Often, when submission is required of us to some arbitrary and imperious command, we are inclined to resent it, the blood flushes our face, lightning flashes in our eyes, and we are inclined to go off in a rage, saying, "Why should I do this thing?" Then the Master approaches us, saying, "Submit for my sake; do it because I wish it; gently remonstrate against the injustice if you will, and if your remonstrances are likely to avail; but if you cannot alter or amend it, be content to submit; I wish it to be so." This makes the sullen iron swim; changes Marah into Elim; and fills the lion with the sweetness of the honeycomb. Oh, do not complain, and fret, and chafe against me! Tell your griefs to your King. Wait patiently for Him, and He will set you free. Or if not, then believe that his permissions are his appointments, and in bending your meek neck to the unwelcome yoke of human ordinances, be sure that you are performing his good pleasure. The talisman of victory in all such cases, the key to earth's best peace as it is to heaven's choicest boons, is found in the little words, "for the Lord's sake."

There is great reasonableness in these words. The world from the first hated the religion of Jesus, and professed to suspect it, as inimical to itself. It was a favourite charge against the early Christians that they were plotting the overthrow of the Empire, and the dethronement of Cæsar, in favour of "one Jesus." Their private meetings were supposed to be convened for unlawful political purposes. It was therefore necessary that men's minds should be disabused of the impression that any violence subversal of existing society was contemplated.

For this purpose the early Christians were specially exhorted to conform, so far as they could, to the demands and usages of the people, amongst whom they sojourned as pilgrims and strangers. They were to render to Cæsar the things that were Cæsar's. If they accepted the order, and safety, and privileges of a settled national and corporate life, they were to bear their quota of its cost, and yield homage to the form of government which they found in vogue, agreeing to modify or alter it only by orderly and constitutional methods. They were therefore called upon to render to all their dues, tribute to whom tribute, custom to whom custom, fear to whom fear, honour to whom honour. A quiet and peaceable life was to be their model; submission their law; well-doing their purpose. Thus, in the process of time, they would disarm prejudice, and conciliate their foes, by the exhibition of the graces of an inoffensive, tender, and beneficent life.

It is very beautiful to remark how literally these precepts were obeyed. Tertullian contrasts the early Christians with the heathen. These delighted in the bloody gladiatorial shows of the amphitheatre, whereas a Christian was excommunicated if he went to it at all. When the pagans deserted their nearest relatives in the plague, Christians ministered to the sick. When Gentiles left their dead unburied on the field of battle, and cast their wounded into the streets, the disciples hastened to relieve their sufferings. Thus they muzzled the ignorance of foolish men. The tide began to turn. The more microscopic (ver. 12) was the inspection of the world, the more evident was it that a new and blameless character was abroad. Pliny admitted in his letter to the Emperor Trajan that there was no cause of blame in the followers of the new religion, "save a perverse and extravagant superstition." And the holy example of the primitive believers is cited by Merivale as one of the four causes of the conversion of the Roman empire.

But, of course, there are limits to the application of these words.—Our first service must always be to God. And when the demands of the king or his governors clash with the commands of the Supreme, there is no longer place for submission, but for refusal. Instantly the soul recognises that there is no room for vacillation. Indecision is not to be thought of. The Apostles, who were the first to advocate obedience to existing authority, were also the very first to exclaim, when that authority was intruding into the realm of conscience: "We must obey God rather than men." And they accepted the consequences to the bitter dregs.

The two kingdoms need not clash. We may obey God in submitting to the ordinances of man. We may do well in Cæsar's empire, without contravening our allegiance to Christ. Nay, more, we shall be better citizens to Cæsar, because we are citizens of the kingdom of heaven. But when Cæsar steps over the line of the material, and outward into the spiritual and eternal, there must be persistent refusal, though we rot in the gaol, or the moss grows thick and dank upon our eyes. But even then we are God's free men, because his slaves.

III. THE FOURFOLD APPLICATION. Honour all men. Perhaps value or esteem would better render the force of the original word. They were to manifest such a kindly interest in all men as would arise from a recognition of the worth of each. There is some worth in the most worthless. In each human being there is something which, in the eye of God, is of infinite value. A lost money-piece which has rolled away into the dust, but is worth sweeping the house to find. Put the most degraded in one scale, and the weight of a world of gold in the other, and the world would kick the beam. The blood of the Son of God is its only equivalent. Let us try to view men as God does, so shall we fulfil this injunction.

Love the brotherhood.—Love is not sentiment, but self-sacrifice; not liking every one necessarily, but making others, instead of self, the pivot of our living. And this is the spirit which we should show to all who own the same Fatherhood, and therefore belong to the same Brotherhood.

Fear God.—True love expels the fear that hath torment, and begets godly fear that dreads to cause Him pain. And every step of growth in holiness is measured by the increase of this fear, as the rise of the Nile is measured by the breadth of territory over which it spreads itself. Love persuades a man, says Leighton, purely for the goodness and loveliness of God, to fear to offend Him, though there were no interest at all in it of a man's own personal misery or happiness.

Honour the king.—Respect human institutions. That lesson lay at the beginning of this paragraph, and it is repeated at its close; and, surely, if so much is said of honour for an earthly monarch, much more might be urged on the behalf of the claims of the King of kings. Oh that men would honour Him, with the honour they give to the Father! He is worthy to receive the power, and riches, and wisdom, and might, and honour, and glory, and blessing; for He was slain, and has redeemed us to God by his blood. Let us honour Him with no stinting love.

Those who give themselves most absolutely to God, are given back by Him most completely to live for others. Christ does make us members of another sphere, but at the same time He bids us take a warm and living interest in all that touches human life around for his sake.

COLPORTAGE IN IRELAND.

DEAR SIR,—The withdrawal of Rev. T. Connellan from the Church of Rome, to which you have been calling attention, has given fresh interest to the work of the Lord in Ireland. Not a few have been emboldened to take fresh courage, and to think that there are brighter days in store for this unhappy land. The difficulties of carrying on Christian work in a country where religious and political differences have been so acute are well known. Those who labour for the spiritual enlightenment of Ireland feel that they have a claim on the sympathies of God's people, not only in England and Scotland, but over all the world. The affairs of our country have been very prominent for many years, and have largely engrossed the attention of political circles. Surely there are those who contemplate her condition from another standpoint, and who are persuaded that her sorrows are to be healed only by the Gospel of redeeming grace.

Friends at a distance may imagine that nothing is being attempted. Such is not the case; various organisations are at work. In the year 1859, which will always be memorable for the religious awakening that then shook the North, there was started the Bible and Colportage Society, which has ever since been quietly and efficiently prosecuting its labours, scattering far and wide an inspired and wholesome literature, whose teachings are so much needed. The past year has been one of much encouragement, and a copy of the report will gladly be sent to anyone who furnishes his name and address.

The Society is undenominational, taking its agents from the various evangelical churches, and having on its different committees active and interested members of the various denominations. At present it employs twenty-six colporteurs. These men are not mere sellers of books, but try to make the Gospel known as opportunity offers in their visitation from house to house. Sometimes a friend undertakes the support of one of these agents, and, if £40 are contributed in this way, the Society guarantees to make up the balance of the man's salary.

Yours faithfully, THOMAS LYLE,
Assistant Secretary.

Dunadry Manse, Belfast.

A PEACE SUNDAY.—The Committee of the Peace Society have recently addressed a circular to the ministers of some of the leading religious denominations, suggesting the desirability of appropriating one Sunday in the year to special services for the promotion of international peace and arbitration. Many of the replies unite in suggesting the Sunday before Christmas Day, as a peculiarly appropriate occasion for such advocacy of peace and goodwill. The committee, therefore, urgently invite all ministers of religion, so far as the circumstances of their work will allow, to adopt this Sunday, for the purpose of bringing the subject before their congregations.

WORK AT LAGOS.

WRITING to a friend in England, Rev. James Johnson, of the Church Missionary Society at Lagos, West Africa, tells of the founding of a Y.W.C.A. under favourable circumstances. The movement has been espoused warmly by a number of Christian ladies, and the work is carried on upon unsectarian lines. Some of those whom it is desired to benefit can read and write English, so that simple English papers and books would be much appreciated by the friends in charge.

Mr. Johnson also reports increased spiritual life in connection with a series of special services at his church. Not a few professed to receive definite blessing, and there were inquirers who gave their hearts to the Saviour.

"Do pray," adds the writer, "that God may use us more than He has hitherto done. The Mohammedans have just been celebrating their Bairam festival. An extraordinarily large number of sheep and bullocks have been slaughtered in sacrifice; some say 4000. The great Sacrifice is rejected—unknown; and where it is not rejected, the fear of injury from fellow Mohammedans prevents a confession of Jesus as Saviour."

THE RELIEF OF PERSECUTED JEWS.

THOUGH scattered and peeled, Israel is not forgotten of God; neither do the sufferings of the seed of Jacob appeal in vain for sympathy and help from followers of Christ. This is rendered evident from the report recently issued of the operations of the Syrian Colonisation Fund, under the direction of the Society for the Relief of Persecuted Jews. Not that the response is anything like adequate to the pressing need; but, nevertheless, there is a response which testifies to the reality of Christian love for Israel.

The operations of the Society are not confined to any one city or country. In England many a poor Jew has been helped at a critical moment; while in Palestine and America colonies have been administered for the benefit of such as would otherwise have been unemployed. "Abraham's Vineyard," where poor men residing with their families in Jerusalem are trained and employed in the cultivation of the land and other industries, increases in productiveness and value. The Alliance Colony, Vineland, New Jersey, U.S.A., also continues to be prosperous, Christian residents in the district, declaring that the Jewish farms and farmers compare very favourably with their German, Irish, and Italian neighbours. Persecution of the Jews is still rife in some Continental countries, and in Russia steps have been taken to deprive Hebrew children of educational advantages.

Just at this crisis, however, the Turkish Government has withdrawn its objections to the settlement of Jews in Palestine. But how can the poor people "settle" while in a destitute condition, unless Christians come to their relief? This is the pertinent question asked in the report, and followers of Christ are urged to be gracious without delay, by way of making such amends as may be possible for wrongs inflicted upon the seed of Israel by professing Christians in bygone days. It is to Palestine that the Jews go in greatest numbers, for there at least they may die unmolested. There are said to be 70,000 in the land, thousands of them starving for want of food. We shall rejoice to learn that the Society is speedily enabled to help many more to join the advance guard of Israel Returned from Dispersion. From kindness shown them by Christians, they may then, with God's blessing, learn something of true Christianity. The Society's office is at 41, Parliament-street, Westminster, S.W.; Mrs. E. A. Finn, secretary.

Some Scottish Missions.—VIII.

ALTHOUGH, as already intimated, these notes do not profess to give more than a glance at some Scottish Missions, yet to omit any mention of the

ROBERTSON MISSION CHURCH

(which, unfortunately, I was unable to visit) would be to give an inadequate idea of the efforts put forth by Edinburgh Christians for the evangelisation of that "stony ground"—the Grassmarket.

I cull a few facts as to the origin of the work from a most interesting "Memorial Sketch" of the late Dr. William Robertson, of New Greyfriars' Church, written by Miss R. F. Hardy, and reprinted from "Pen-Portraits of Eminent Divines."

Visitors to Edinburgh know well the two quaint city churches, forming but one venerable pile, called the Old and New Greyfriars, to which they are duly taken to be shown the grey historic monuments, and the quiet, romantic-looking "kirkyard," where so many martyrs lie buried, where the Covenant was signed—signed even with the blood of the faithful—and where some rusty iron gratings still guard the alley in which the ill-fated prisoners taken at the Battle of Bothwell Bridge were to await their doom. Surrounded by these memorials, and also by many a mouldering mausoleum of forgotten grandeur, the Greyfriars churches, though possessed of little architectural beauty, will always form a striking and interesting feature of Old Edinburgh.

It was to one of these well-known churches—the New Greyfriars—that, in 1844, William Robertson came, fresh from his quiet country parish of Logie, and eager to enter on a wider sphere for which he doubtless felt himself well fitted. In that low-lying Grassmarket, upon which his old kirk looked somewhat sleepily down, there were dark dens of crime and vice and drunkenness, into which policemen alone had penetrated; and here did the new minister of Greyfriars find the field of his future long and successful labours. Gathering a little band of fellow-workers around him, he started his Mission, and it was not long before the closes and wynds had been thoroughly investigated, and the state of matters at least ascertained. How hopeless seemed the case of the old and hardened, even to those eyes so full of sanguine faith and earnestness. But the little children playing at their feet—surely it was not too late for them! And then to Dr. Robertson's mind occurred the grand idea of a ragged school—that idea in which he was so nobly seconded, perhaps surpassed, by his eloquent contemporary, Dr. Guthrie.

Not a few Greyfriars people still remember the little flat in Merchant-street where Dr. Robertson made the first attempt at that ragged school work which has since grown to such large proportions. In that bare, scantily furnished room stood the eager philanthropist, surrounded by some twenty city arabs of the day—quite as eager as himself indeed, but it was for the hot broth and the floury "baps" rather than for the bright visions of reform that floated before the pastor's mind. There was another room furnished with ample tubs, hot water and soap, besides an experienced matron ready to preside over the ablutionary process; but into this the young aspirants after learning were by no means anxious to press! There was no lack either of grumbling mothers in the background—complaining that their laddies or lassies had "jist fair gotten their daith wi' a' that plouterin'!"

There were many queer characters ferreted out among the dark stairs and closes by that zealous missionary. There was old Mike O'Reilly for one, who shared his own lofty attic with his "cuddy," the active partner of his commercial enterprises. Contrary to the old tradition regarding donkeys,

MIKE'S "CUDDY" DIED

—died in the garret too! And it was no easy matter to get its carcase down. But a new donkey was provided for Mike, and more suitable quarters too, and he became one of the "pillars" of the little mission church just then rising to existence. There was "Granny" too, another well-known Market face, who, in later days, came to attend not only the mission room but the "big kirk" as well; and, though very deaf, seemed to enjoy the services. "I whiles dinna hear the minister," she said, "but then I aye ken what he's at"—a speech which amused Dr. Robertson himself.

A visit to the Vennel Ragged School any day will well reward the trouble of mounting that steep ascent. It is a well-managed institution, full of industry both as to head and hands. There is the Working Man's Church in the Grassmarket, now a handsome Memorial Building, consisting of church and mission-halls, shops, and dwelling-houses for working people. There is also the Orphan Home at Abbey Hill. But perhaps the Ragged School will always retain its place as the best monument to the memory of Dr. Robertson.

It was on New Year's Day of 1882 that he last bade the school children, as was his custom on that day, a "good New Year." It was very evident even then that the hand of death was upon him, and that he would never so greet them again. But to his people there was a later occasion of even more solemn and impressive farewell. On the last Sunday of January, in the near prospect of leaving his home, the quarterly communion service was held—Dr. Frederick Robertson, of Glasgow, officiating, the minister himself only breaking the bread, and uttering in a low voice the usual words of consecration. How earnestly many of his old flock gazed on the familiar countenance, grown so pure and spiritual in those later days! Forty years, it might almost be said, he had led his people through the wilderness, as Moses, the man of God, had once led his. Very many had crossed the river before him, and were now in that Canaan which he had taught them to love. Only a few of his first congregation now remained.

The service was over. The blessing alone remained to be pronounced, and Dr. Robertson raised his hands as usual in that last ceremony. But emotion overcame him; no words came from his faltering lips; the uplifted hands fell, and the white head bent lowly down on them—

HIS PASTORAL WORK WAS DONE.

The officiating clergyman took up the words, and the blessing was pronounced as usual, but the recollection of that unspoken benediction will always remain in the hearts of his people.

In Rev. Henry Cowan, the able and distinguished successor to Dr. Robertson in New Greyfriars, the Mission has lost nothing, and gained much by the fresh impetus of personal energy combined with mature experience. Under him good work has been done by successive missionaries who now fill wider spheres in the Church. At present, the Mission Church (opened in June, 1885) is under the superintendence of Rev. T. D. Watt, who carries on the work with untiring zeal.

The Church of Scotland's Young Men's Guild have recently fixed on the Grassmarket as a centre for one of their mission enterprises, and, in addition to this, members of other churches and other communions have been of late pressing forward to help in the good cause. In the old Mission Church a most hopeful movement has been begun by Mr. R. S. Hynde and friends. Two week-evenings are devoted to young lads, fourteen to sixteen years old, who would otherwise be hanging idly about the streets, but now come in eagerly to be taught reading, writing, arithmetic, drawing, and natural history.

Through numerous agencies the Robertson Mission Buildings are kept in daily use (over 800 services and meetings being held during the year); the district is systematically visited; the temporal needs of the destitute and deserving are brought under consideration, and, so far as practicable, relieved; and a broad stream of parochial missionary influence, fed by numerous tributaries, constantly permeates a locality which, while containing many respectable and God-fearing inhabitants, ranks among the most spiritually necessitous in the city. The number of adherents of the Mission, including children in attendance, exceeds 450, exclusive of 265 scholars of the Vennel School. (This is associated with the Mission; its scholars receive regular meals, and also have a special Sunday-school.)

The workers here have always had amicable relations with the representatives of other Missions labouring in the Grassmarket and its neighbourhood; but, at the instance of Dr. Gunning (who annually contributes £50), steps have been taken to secure a more definite mutual recognition and co-operation, with a view to prevent overlapping and waste of energy, and so to ensure increased missionary efficiency.

In a recent issue the character of the Grassmarket and its surroundings were described. It may, therefore, be easily judged how greatly needed is such work as this, as is also the mission maintained by the U.P. Church, which for some years has laboured in this difficult locality.

Next week I shall hope to commence a few notices of work in Glasgow; but in leaving Edinburgh I may add that good work is being done there by the Church and Salvation Armies, and by the Railway Mission (which has a specially successful branch there); but none of these had I time to visit. G. E. M.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOME.

THE report rendered by Mrs. Birt at the annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of the Liverpool Sheltering Home on Thursday last was in many respects very cheering. In March last the thirty-second party, of seventy-three children, was taken to Canada, in which country the work of kindly supervision proceeds satisfactorily. Many children in the Dominion thank the Home for affording them a chance to live in comfort and be useful members of society. Mrs. Birt remarked with much truth that such forms of benevolence as this will advance in public esteem as their necessity is more widely appreciated.

Mr. R. F. Lang, hon. treasurer, reported a debt of £2300 still owing to the contractors for the new building in Myrtle-street. Carrying on the work in freehold premises will result in a saving of £300 a year in rent, which sum, with more besides, will, however, be needed to enable Mrs. Birt and her assistants to give more children the benefits of the Institution. Moreover, £1000 is still required with which to furnish the building.

The Mayor of Liverpool, Mr. T. Hughes, who presided on the occasion, spoke in high terms of the objects and work of the Home. He expressed a hope that the people of Liverpool would not allow operations in anywise to languish, but rather would ensure their further development by increasing their support. Mr. S. Smith, M.P., and Lieut.-Colonel Laurie, M.P., also spoke. The latter remarked that simply from a utilitarian and business point of view, the Home was a great success; but, with Mr. Smith, he rejoiced that the work was of a definitely religious character. The meeting was stimulating to the friends of the Home. It is hoped that its influence will do something to help the funds of the excellent work.

Dr. Pentecost in Dundee.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

As stated in our last issue, the week-night meetings are held in St. Clement's (Established), the afternoon Bible-readings in Free St. Paul's. The Bible-readings were well attended from the first. The meetings at night have deepened steadily in interest, until the end of last week when the feeling of solemnity and deep tenderness has been profound. Dr. Pentecost says that he aims at deep work rather than broad work, and the rousing and sanctifying of Christian life first, as the condition of true revival. Certainly the testimony of those who have attended the meetings is that the Gospel has been told out in sweetness and power, and the wonders of redemption, and the truth of the unseen things of God clearly and vividly revealed. There have been conversions from the beginning; not a great many apparently; but this evangelist's plan of campaign is not calculated to bring to the front any but the most pronounced cases.

The second week opened, as did the first, with four addresses on the Sabbath. The early morning meeting at the Y.M.C.A. was larger and more enthusiastic than that on the previous Sabbath, though held at an earlier hour. The other meetings in the churches were crowded, and all anxiety as to what would be the result of a second Sunday night meeting for men was put to rest by the hall being even fuller, if possible, than on the first night. Every seat was occupied and many stood. There was a goodly show of ministers present. The address was on the "Temporality of things which are seen," partly apologetic, but more warmly evangelistic than on the previous occasion. God was present, and the after-meeting revealed the fact that at least a score of men present had, during the address, accepted Christ as Saviour—that is, as many as openly confessed their acceptance of salvation by leaving their seats before a thousand witnesses, and kneeling at the front form, and afterwards with their lips confessing Jesus Christ as a Saviour.

There was at least one very marked case at this meeting. A fine-looking man, evidently a man of business, remained to the after-meeting. He was seen to be greatly agitated, and with bowed head sat weeping in the body of the hall. During the evangelist's appeal a Christian gentleman went and spoke to him. Presently he arose and came forward to the front seat, weeping and shaking with emotion, fell on his knees, and was heard to cry out, "God be merciful to me a sinner." He afterwards made a confession of faith in Christ. He said in the hearing of some of those around him: "I am a stranger in Dundee. I came into the city on Saturday to attend to some business, and I am sailing for South Africa to-morrow. I had not the least thought of doing anything of this kind. But I went this morning to hear the gentleman who preaches in McCheyne's old church (Mr. Jenkins). He gave an intimation of this meeting from his pulpit, and very earnestly urged the men of his congregation to attend it. I had not heard of the meeting, but resolved to come and hear Dr. Pentecost. I am a great sinner, but I have accepted Christ, and shall go to Africa a new man. Will you all pray for me? for my business will carry me among the most godless and reckless men in the colony."

Another interesting case is reported by a minister. Walking down the street he was surprised to have a man, whom he knew, stop him and say to him with great frankness and warmth, "I have been saved during these meetings." This was the more remarkable considering the reticent ways of our Scottish people, and the fact that this particular man was an educated and peculiarly cold and reserved man, holding to doctrines the very reverse of evangelistic or even evangelical. There are, no doubt, others; indeed, the workers are reporting such cases daily. The meetings for the second week closed hopefully.

It would not be correct to convey the impression that the mission has been an abounding success, for it cannot be said that the city is deeply stirred. But God is working, and we are hoping for greater things during the next fortnight.

An important movement has been inaugurated by some of the leading merchants and manufacturers in the city. Some seventy of them, headed by the Lord Provost and ex-Provost Moncur, have invited Dr. Pentecost to give to the merchants and business men a daily address from 1.15 to 2 o'clock, similar to the series delivered to the Glasgow merchants. He consented to do so, and gave the first on Monday last.

MISS TYSON

began her work among the young on Sabbath week, and already streams of blessing are flowing. Crowded meetings and wonderful power. The singular skill of this consecrated young lady is remarked by all who hear her and witness her work; her use of the chalk and blackboard is so fascinating and illuminating that the Gospel seizes those present by two senses. The older people who attend Miss Tyson's meetings seem as deeply interested as the children. Among her best workers are those who were brought to Christ under Mr. Spiers' work with the children here, ten years ago. This is a good testimony to children's work.

NOTES ON CENTRAL AFRICA.

THE RETURN OF STANLEY AND EMIN

took place on the 4th instant, when they made a sort of triumphal entry into Bagamoyo. After being sumptuously entertained there, Stanley passed over the few miles of water separating the mainland from Zanzibar.

AN ACCIDENT TO EMIN

of a very serious nature took place at the close of the banquet given by the Germans. Walking out of the hall he mistook an open window for a door, being short-sighted, and fell some twenty feet, sustaining severe internal injuries. He was unconscious for ten hours, and his position is regarded as very critical. All the doctors gave him up except Surgeon Parkes, whose skill and care, under God, brought Mr. Stanley through his long and dangerous illness. It is earnestly to be hoped that he may be as successful in this case.

There is something infinitely pathetic and suggestive of serious reflection, in such an event taking place after Emin had undergone so many trials, and just at the moment when his return to the civilised world was being celebrated with feasting and champagne. Whatever the issue may be, no time should be lost in doing full justice to a singularly noble character. His letters, written nearly three years ago, reveal precisely the same faithful clinging to his people which made him so unwilling to leave with Stanley. They are printed in his life by Schweinfurth, Felkin, and other friends. These friends also say: "On no account must anyone imagine that our countryman is a renegade, or that he has given up the faith of his fathers. Emin does not belong to those half-hearted Christians who talk about the advantages of the Mohammedan religion as a civilising agent in Africa. On the contrary, it may be seen from many of his letters that he has the heartiest sympathy with the efforts of Christian missionaries." He offered to maintain a missionary of the C.M.S. for three years at his own expense. It is unfortunate that papers like The Spectator, with a character to lose, should talk of him as a pervert to Islamism.

THE SERIOUS DISASTER

which has taken place, in the loss of the Equator Province and the failure to return through British territory, are kept out of sight by the large discoveries that have been made. As soon, however, as the jubilations are over, the public will begin to realise that the disaster is one of distressing magnitude. Before the Dervishes burst into the Equator Province, Uganda was already in the hands of the slaving Arabs; and now there is nothing to prevent the monstrous crime against humanity diffusing itself all over the region of the great lakes.

Had a road been opened to Mombasa from the Victoria Nyanza, as was intended and expected, then civilising influences could have entered by that road; but, as matters stand, the best hope the British Company seem able to form is that Stanley shall become Governor-General of their territory, and make the way upward from the sea. This would have some advantages; but meanwhile fanaticism and cruelty have an indefinite time allowed them in which to run riot over the ground which Emin had begun to win for righteousness and humanity.

MR. MACKAY'S LETTER TO THE C.M.S.

is of very great interest. It details the revolutions going on in Uganda, and supplies some ground for hope that the cause of Christianity may again be restored in a region where so much martyr blood has been shed, and where there are so many prayers to be answered. He gives a letter sent to him by the deposed King Mwanga, craving his return to help him to regain the throne. "Formerly," says the murderer of Bishop Hannington, "I did not know God, but now I know the religion of Jesus Christ . . . Sir, do not imagine that if you restore Mwanga to Buganda he will become bad again. If you find me become bad, then you may drive me from the throne; but I have given up my former ways, and I only wish now to follow your advice."

The letter was brought by three native Christians holding the rank of "Church councillors." Mr. Mackay's comment on it is of a kind which it would be unsafe to paraphrase. "How many out of our number of two (Mr. Gordon and myself) are expected to be ready to respond to Mwanga's invitation, and go to supply the spiritual wants of the Protestant Christian Church of Buganda? Both of us are far too few for the work to be done at this station (Usambiro), which we dare not abandon. Are we then to abandon our people in Buganda, because our friends in England like to hear and read about them, but will not move a finger to come to their aid?" Three priests were sent at once to Mwanga. An appeal of this sort is not likely to remain long without effect.

KEITH FALCONER MISSION, SOUTH ARABIA.—Mr. Matthew Lochhead writes from Cairo:—"It has been a year of trial to us as a Mission. Dr. Paterson and myself were obliged to leave on account of sickness. He is still at home, and I am here, hoping to regain strength for the work to which God has called us. We need much prayer on our behalf. The devil seems determined to defend the fortresses of Islam, but let not our faith waver; 'If God be for us, who can be against us?'"

LIVERPOOL.—Rev. Charles Garrett's scheme for helping friendless but industrious orphan lads, says The Methodist Recorder, has taken definite shape. In Shaw-street, Liverpool, Mr. Garrett has taken a large house, which Mr. George Fowler has furnished at a cost of £200. This house was opened by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and will accommodate sixty lads—poor lads who are trying to help themselves The institution is in no sense sectarian, and it is free from the taint of pauperism. The boys pay for the accommodation provided proportionately to their earnings. Part of the house is to be used for married women and their families who are en route to join their husbands in America, and also for young female emigrants. By an arrangement with the Methodist Episcopal Church in America, similar provision will be made on the other side of the Atlantic. At both ends of the voyage officers of the Homes will meet and care for the travellers.

A Working Girls' Tea-party.

THE lot of those working girls in our great city whom circumstances have deprived of the shelter of the parental roof-tree, is not in many respects an enviable one. Nothing can possibly make up for the loss of all that a real home implies—sympathy, counsel, care in time of sickness, and a safe retreat from the rude blasts of abounding temptation. In default of these, what an immense boon are the substitutes provided by those Christian friends who have "a heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathise" with homeless and lonely toiling sisters in this vast bee-hive. The "Homes for Working Girls in London" are places that we have often had occasion to describe and to speak well of. How much their occupants owe to the unceasing and thoughtful attention of the Hon. Director, Mr. John Shrimpton, it would be difficult to say.

Among the many expedients which he adopts for projecting sunshine into the working life of his clients, is a great annual tea party at which the inmates of all the nine Homes can unitedly "assist." This year he was most fortunate in getting Miss Morley to act as hostess. That estimable daughter of our great City merchant and philanthropist was treading very closely in her deceased father's footsteps in entertaining these young women, for we well remember the hearty solicitude with which he regarded this class of our community.

Portman Rooms, in Baker-street, was the scene of this delightful and happy gathering, held on Monday evening, at a sufficiently late hour to enable the guests to attend after the day's work was over. These beautiful rooms have never been put to a better purpose. The tea hour, of course, was a time of pleasant meetings and greetings, and the interchange of womanly talk—a buzzing Babel of conversation. Then followed a musical entertainment, provided by the kind hostess, of which we can only say that the uppermost of "the upper ten" could wish for nothing better or more artistic. By exquisite song, and skilfully handled instrument, the performers gave the listeners a time of rare enjoyment. Added to this, there were an excellent exposition and some striking illustrations of the marvels of Edison's phonograph: it was truly a sojourn in wonderland. There was also an exhibition of a "potter's wheel," from Doulton's Lambeth establishment, which excited much attention.

To crown all, Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke gave the young people some simple but timely and helpful words of brotherly exhortation, striking the threefold chord of Coming, Giving, Going. On the first point he spoke of the looked for return of our Lord, whose second advent would solve many problems and right many wrongs. The second point was suggested by the near approach of Christmas, the season of gifts that speaks so clearly of God's great gift to the world. The year that is "going," and will so soon be gone, was the last point, and that enabled Mr. Sherbrooke to press home on the hearers some lessons as to personal responsibility toward God and toward one another. Though the hour was late, many lingered to say their last good-nights to acquaintances of former years (for the old inmates of the Homes were among those invited); and as each left she received a little book, as a souvenir of the occasion, and an added token of the interest felt in their welfare by the kind lady who entertained them.

MR. W. ASHDOWN (late of a well-known firm in Bombay), having retired from active participation in business, intends to devote himself to missionary work in India.

WORK IN THE RIVIERA.

DEAR SIR,—At San Remo, more than ten years ago, Mr. Gordon Oswald began a work of evangelisation which has been blessed to many. For some years he defrayed the expenses of an evangelist in that town. At present this state of things has changed, some of the old members having withdrawn, leaving others to take their place. To the same town, six years ago, the Waldensian Church of Piedmont sent, and has kept there ever since, a pastor. Combined with his work of evangelisation, there are a school and Sunday-class.

At a short distance from Bordighera there is the Evangelical School of Vallecrosia, sheltering about forty children of both sexes. The institution has been founded and supported by Mrs. Henry Boyce, who, for more than twenty years, has lovingly devoted to the work her time and money. Attached to the school there is a pretty chapel, where every Sunday the Gospel is preached in Italian to a congregation more or less regular. The neighbouring town of Ventimiglia, and other places, such as Borghetto, have been visited, and the sick attended and comforted by the evangelist of Vallecrosia. At Bordighera, in a large hall close to the station, the Gospel was faithfully preached the whole of last winter by the evangelist of Vallecrosia.

At Bordighera there is the hospital of Mrs. Walker—a lovely villa rather than a hospital, where Roman Catholic sick are received as well as the Protestants. In the parish of Vallecrosia there is the Casa Vittoria (dependent upon an English committee) where, upon the Mattei system, Miss Gilardi nurses gratuitously the sick poor. It seems she has much success in this truly Christian work.

There are still many places on the east side of the Riviera where the Gospel has never been preached. There is, therefore, room for plenty of willing workers.—Yours faithfully,

GIOVANNI ROCHAT, Waldensian Pastor.
Villa Violetta, Bordighera.

THE LATE PROFESSOR ELMSLIE.

BY way of recognising the loss the churches have sustained by the lamented death of Professor Elmslie, the leading Presbyterians of England, shortly after his departure, mooted the question of raising a memorial in his honour. Professor Elmslie was, however, held in sincere and well-deserved regard by members of other churches, and a proposal was at once made for the scheme to be broadened so as at least to allow of the co-operation of Congregationalists and Baptists. This suggestion gave pleasure all round, and on Monday afternoon last a meeting was held in the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, to forward the movement. Sir George Bruce presided over a gathering which was in every sense of the word representative of the three bodies named.

The proceedings were very happy throughout. There was not only harmony of sentiment, but also a visible union of members of the body of Christ. It was decided to raise an Elmslie memorial fund, firstly, to provide for the education and advancement in life of the Professor's only son; and, secondly, to found a scholarship for the promotion of Old Testament and Semitic learning among the Presbyterians, Independents, and Baptists of England. For this about £4000 will be required. Many things were, of course, said in praise of the scholar who is so widely mourned. Rev. Dr. Hannay, in moving one of the resolutions, referred in terms affording great pleasure to the meeting to the joy of the denominational intercommunication which the scheme so grandly promises to promote. Surely, he said, there is no insuperable obstacle in the way of an arrangement whereby we should work together more than we have done in the past; keeping our own denominational positions, we might well combine in all good endeavours, and present a bolder front than at present to the sin which prevails on every hand. Dr. Fraser, Professor Gould, Drs. Dykes, Allon, Clifford, Matthews, and Monro Gibson, also spoke. The last-named found special cause of rejoicing in the opportunity which the scheme will afford for united effort in Gospel work on the part of members of the Free Churches. There were few thoughts dearer to the heart of Professor Elmslie than that of the union of Christians, especially those who are already so near together as the Presbyterians, Congregationalists, and Baptists. One in Christ Jesus, Christians ought certainly to manifest their union before the world. The hon. sec. of the scheme is Mr. G. Walter Knox, 16, Finsbury-circus, S.E.

MAJOR WHITTLE AT STRATFORD.

MUCH blessing has attended the work of Major Whittle at Stratford, E. Night after night there have been goodly gatherings in the Conference Hall. On Sunday evening the spacious building was all but full, the congregation including a large number of young people. The word spoken was, as the times emphatically demand, plain to the point of simplicity, and distinctly personal to the hearer. In his perversity, man to-day denies the Holy One and the Just, equally as the Jews did when they rejected the Lord Christ. This was the burden of the Major's testimony on Sunday, and it was also shown that it is no less true in Western lands to-day than it was in Judea of old, that a murderer is desired instead of Jesus. For the very sin which causes man to deny the Saviour inevitably proves his murderer at last.

Major Whittle never whitewashes the heart and mind of fallen humanity. He is faithful to expose man's corruption, and to enlarge upon the fact that such as have not ranged themselves on the side of the risen Redeemer are "condemned already." He enforces the supreme obligation as well as the great privilege of obeying God's command to believe on Christ, and illustrates his teaching by many a telling anecdote. Not only does he narrow the controversy with God so as to show the responsibility of those who listen to him, but he appeals in turn to young and old, to respectable sinners and proficients in transgression. We rejoice to learn that his meetings have been attended by all sorts and conditions of men, and that night after night many have stood up and desired prayer to God on their behalf.

During the afternoons of this week Major Whittle has been giving Bible-readings in local churches representing various evangelical denominations. This is a fact bearing witness to the wide-spread sympathy which Christian workers have shown for him in his mission. We sincerely trust that our friends of the Conference Hall, as well as the pastors of the churches, will see fruit "after many days" of the meetings which have already been attended by blessing to a very cheering degree.

The evangelist begins, on Sabbath evening next, a week's services at the Mission Hall, Auckland Hill, West Norwood.

SOLDIERS AT QUEENSTOWN.—DEAR SIR,—There are in Queenstown Harbour 900 soldiers. Numbers of them come to Queenstown every evening, and as there is no Soldiers' Home they are tempted by the public-house. At times they cannot get back at night, should it prove stormy. A Home, to be conducted on unsectarian lines, is greatly needed, and is in contemplation. There will be evangelistic and temperance meetings. It depends upon promises of support whether we begin in a central position or in a less suitable house.—Yours faithfully,

Queenstown, Co. Cork.

A Call to Prayer.

SOMETIMES, in coming along one of the roads on Sunday nights, I see something like nine or ten stations where the Gospel is being faithfully preached in the streets of Sunderland. Side by side with this earnest Christian effort is the dark life of thousands who, in spite of so much Gospel preaching, are passing down the steep slope that goes to that place where hope never comes. Surely there is something ominous in the number of warnings that are heard on every side. So many special calls cannot be heard and rejected by so many, without aggravating the guilt of our country and precipitating a crisis. It seems that a momentous hour at hand is casting its shadow before.

It was before the Captivity that most of the prophets were raised up, to warn the Jews of coming judgment; and before their final dispersion the Gospel was pressingly proclaimed on every hand before the crisis came. So we hear the warning voice of God's messengers sounding out on every hand, stamping the passing hour with a special character. Is this age the forerunner of the judgment that is impending?

HAS THE WORLD GROWN BETTER

under Gospel preaching? We can go into dens of sin, and feel that we are as near to hell as it is possible to be on this side of the grave. We see men under the sound of the Gospel, foaming out their own shame, "twice dead, bereft of all self-respect, pictures of ruin, never-dying souls rotting away, as corpses rot away in their graves." If they had come from out of hell, they could not have been much worse. We hear wickedness poured out as fast as tongues can speak it, and almost as dreadful to hear as if it were the howl of the lost.

We see those who are rejecting every offer of mercy, in every stage of their descent, from the beginner to the helpless ones who have reached the last stage of their descent. The strong man armed keeps the houses of thousands around us, and they do not know how fast bound they are.

Such scenes as these are enough "to make the righteous sad, whom the Lord hath not made sad," and to fill the child of God with some of that bitterness of soul that the prophet felt when he cried: "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people." To the watchers and the holy ones above, what a sight it must be to see this moving mass of lost souls. What an incessant cry of agony and misery is rising up to God's ears.

is appealing with a force that cannot surely be disregarded. In past days the governing powers killed the martyrs for their religion; now the governing powers kill their thousands that the revenue may be raised. "Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord; shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?"

How complacently we look on at such a state of things! Surely, if the Spirit of the Lord had free play, the burden of souls would be so heavy on his people that it would be too bitter to be quietly borne. We should know what it is to agonise in prayer that we might get relief from the pressure of our sorrow for the souls that are perishing all around. How often when we meet in our prayer-meetings it seems like playing at prayer. Take away the words, and how much feeling would be left? We may say our prayers, and yet never pray. The earnest tone in the cry of misery around us puts our sympathy to shame. It is not saying our prayers that will bring the "refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Have we learnt what kind of an occasion it is that we live in, and what a world in such a state as this is demands from the believer who goes to the mercy-seat to plead its cause? Who is compelled to go to the throne of grace for relief from bitterness of soul? But what is prayer alone without personal service? When Elijah tried to win the widow's son from death, he lay upon the child to warm the dead corpse with his own heat: so if we want to impart feeling into the dead souls that surround us, we must do it by personal contact: soul must touch soul, heart must speak to heart, that we may excite them with emotions that come from ourselves. "He that winneth souls is wise."

BIBLE WORK IN SOUTH AMERICA.

AN esteemed friend in Buenos Ayres sends some interesting particulars of the work of the American Bible Society in the Argentine Republic, which is under the superintendence of Rev. Andrew M. Milne:—

"This year the annual meeting was held in Buenos Ayres, and was presided over by Bishop Walden. There are about thirty who give their entire time to the work, and about twenty unpaid helpers. We had a very delightful time together, and we trust the workers have returned to their respective fields with renewed energy and consecration. One of the results promises to be the establishment of permanent work in Bolivia, thus opening the way for the evangelising of the three millions of Quichna Indians, for whom nothing has as yet been attempted. Mr. Milne and Senor Penzotti saw many of them when in Bolivia in 1883. They were greatly interested in them. The former has carefully gathered statistics and information concerning them. They are the descendants of the subjects of the Lucas; are settled, and very docile; quite different from the wandering savage tribes, to some of whom the South American Missionary Society is taking the Gospel. They come into the towns with their llamas laden with maize, charcoal, or other produce. Having disposed of their merchandise, they go to the priest, holding their hands together in the attitude of humble suppliants. He repeats in Latin a 'Padre Nuestro' for five cents, and an 'Ave Maria' for other five, and then with a small brush he sprinkles a few drops of water on them from a tin vessel which he carries under his cloak.

"There are encouraging tidings from Senor Penzotti, in Peru. In addition to his own work as agent for the American Bible Society he has organised the first evangelical church in Peru, and reports eighty-five adherents. His family has suffered greatly from fever and ague, and both he and his colporteurs have been imprisoned, but he is blessed in seeing the fruit of his toil, and writes in very good spirits. No doubt a resident pastor will soon be sent there. Mr. Penzotti's work, like Mr. Milne's, keeps him on the move. His home is in Callao. Mr. Milne expects to go to Peru and do some work with him before the year closes.

"Ecuador is now the only country on this continent that officially declares itself shut against the Gospel. In 1886 about a ton of Scriptures was turned away from Guayaquil, its chief seaport, and had to be re-shipped to Peru. The angels, I think, must have sighed over the sight, but the authorities knew not what they did. Mr. Milne still looks toward Ecuador, however, with hope and with prayer. When in Mendoza last August, at the opening of a new evangelical church, he met a young Ecuadoriano, recently converted there through the reading of the Scriptures. He is very anxious to take the Gospel to his countrymen, many of whom he says long to be free from the bondage of Romanism; also one of Senor Penzotti's colporteurs is an Ecuadoriano who has the same desire for his fellow-countrymen."

WORKING LADS OF EAST LONDON.

THE Working Lads' Institute, Whitechapel, E., is widely known as an excellent institution, offering social, educational, and religious advantages to boys who unquestionably stand in great need of help. We are glad to know that many a boy brought up in the tenements of East London has, on arriving at man's estate, filled a position of honour in the community. If, however, such has been realised in generations when comparatively little was done to aid the poor and needy, what may not be expected as a result of the beneficent operations of the Working Lads' Institute and establishments of a kindred character? Already the influence of the Institute has been great as well as good. This was made clear at the thirteenth annual meeting, held on Tuesday evening last week, under the presidency of the Hon. T. Allnutt Brassey.

Mr. HENRY HILL, the devoted hon. secretary, presented an inspiring report. The year's work had been successful, and more agencies had been in operation than previously. The evening classes, for educational and technical instruction, were fairly well attended; and when it is borne in mind that the membership is made up of lads who spend the daytime working for their living, this statement is demonstrative of the esteem in which the Institute is held by those whom it is intended most particularly to benefit. Many boys learned to swim in the swimming-bath, which has, moreover, been thrown open to outsiders, and proved of great public utility. To orphans and lads coming from the country, the large dormitories of the Institute have afforded the essentials of a home. The Bible-classes and occasional evangelistic services have been well attended. Altogether, nearly 5000 lads have, up to the present, enjoyed the advantages of the Institute. The employment register has been useful, both to lads wanting situations, and to business houses seeking trustworthy boys. One of the most encouraging statements in the report was to the effect that of the old members, who have now reached manhood, some have started similar institutes, while others are engaged in temperance and Christian work, as secretaries, Sunday-school teachers, and lay preachers. The management and other expenses are very small when compared to the large amount of work done, but yet the year closed with a deficit. There is also a debt of £5000 on the building account, which is greatly to be regretted, seeing that the Institute has so amply justified its existence by good work for God among the very class which by general admission most seriously needs compassion and help.

The Chairman having heartily commended the work, some words of cordial sympathy were spoken by Messrs. F. W. Isaacson, M.P., Stuart Samuel, F. A. Bevan, and Bertrand Y. Bevan. Several subscriptions were announced towards the sum of £1000, now being raised in reduction of the debt. The prizes for progress at the evening classes were afterwards presented by Mrs. F. A. Bevan. Thus, and by many kind acts and words, the lads are encouraged to persevere in mental and moral culture.

THE CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY.—The 117th annual report of this Society is a record of varied and earnest labour. Four hundred workers, of both sexes, give their time towards helping on one or more of the many efforts. The summary of operations contains the following high figures: 3000 lodging-house people, and 15,000 workhouse inmates, visited every week; 2918 services held during the year in eight mission-halls; 5198 homeless men received in the all-night shelter, and breakfasted; 1500 dinners to children, and 12,000 free breakfasts, teas, and suppers, and 233,000 tracts distributed. The office is Memorial Hall, London-street, Bethnal-green, E.; Mr. J. Atkinson, secretary.

For the Young.

LONDON ORPHANS IN CANADA.

By Miss C. R. Stock.

In the autumn of last year Mrs. Merry received an urgent application from a lady and gentleman living in a country village some thirty miles from one of the big cities on the other side of the water, that she would send them one of our children for adoption. The appeal, moreover, came from one who was not an entire stranger, for Mr. Merry had occasionally met the gentleman when travelling from place to place, visiting the boys and girls placed out in homes and situations, and wherever his name had been spoken of it was always with profound respect.

Having about that time quite a number of bonny little ones under nine years old in the Stratford Home (Ontario), it had occurred to Mrs. Merry to have a few of them photographed in a small group, that the photograph might be shown to friends, and some hearts perchance become inclined to take "one of these" in Christ's name. Soon after, on a sunny autumn morning, we drove down town with nine little girls of the ages of four to seven years, carefully dressed in neat little frocks, made by English friends far away at their working parties. Mounting the long flight of stairs to the photographic studio, nine little active pairs of feet sped in simultaneously, greatly astonishing the good man, and calling forth the exclamation, "I've often seen twins, but what are these?"

When we are seeking to live and work for the Lord, does He not lead and guide even in the smallest detail? So we did not deem it to be mere chance that Mrs. A——'s letter arrived within a day or two after the photograph was sent home. Here it was, all ready to send to her, that she might make her choice from the fair little company.

"I WANT THEM ALL!"

Followed by many longing thoughts, the picture went its way through the post, and speedily there came back the surprising answer, "I want them all!" This was not, however, the whole sum and substance of the letter. The attitudes and the expression on the faces of these little girls had evidently all been carefully studied and thought over, and the copious notes and comments on each one proved that Mrs. A—— was a woman of discernment and knowledge of character.

After much consideration and earnest prayer for Divine guidance, Mrs. Merry replied that she would send three little ones, a boy and two of the girls, whose faces were already familiar to her through the photograph. (Mr. A—— in one of his letters had particularly expressed the desire for a boy to bring up as his own.)

The choice was made, the necessary arrangements completed, and a few days after we started with the three for their new home. It was a rather long journey, for Canadian trains are by no means so quick as those in England; but at last the long line of "cars" drew up at the "depôt," and we hurried out of the carriage and up the platform, eagerly scanning the faces for our unknown friend.

"OUR NEW MAMMA."

In a few seconds we beheld before us a lady standing quite still, but her very attitude betokening eager expectancy, and such a look on her expressive face! She was gazing intently, waiting for a sight of the little ones: in a moment we were beside her, when, with a mother's tenderness, she stooped, and lovingly embraced the little orphans, welcoming them to her heart and home. Soon we were seated in another train for a short further journey, and here there was time for Mrs. A—— more leisurely to notice each one, to listen to their increasing prattle, and presently she remarked of one of them, "That child has started no less than nine tunes with perfect correctness since we entered the car!"

Arrived soon at the village station, a very few minutes' walk brought us to the snug little dwelling—all plain, comfortable, and homely. There were two parlours, opening one into the other; in one, an American organ and a large sewing machine occupied prominent places on either side. In the other was a monster cage, six feet long, containing forty singing canaries, which were gazed at with great delight by the little ones, and helped to make them feel quite at home. Soon a plentiful tea and a good night's rest fell to their portion, and next morning, when we bade them farewell on leaving for Stratford, they appeared already quite settled in there new home, and not one of the three had the slightest wish to return with us.

Three months passed away. Not all sunshine and brightness. There were faults to overcome, good principles to inculcate, implicit obedience to enforce; but, as Christmas drew on, the good foster-mother felt her labour was not in vain because it was "in the Lord," and, as the festive season drew nigh, she began to long to make some more happy!

ASKING FOR OTHER THREE.

Mrs. A—— therefore summoned up fresh courage, and wrote to Mrs. Merry to ask if she might be entrusted with three more children, especially mentioning that she would like one, at least, to be very young; in fact she would like to have the smallest in the Home, whether boy or girl.

The request was complied with, all feeling that, should the six prove too many for her time and strength, it would be quite easy to return some in the spring: meanwhile they would be improving in health, in manners, and in refinement; there could be no loss, it must be all gain.

Away went another lady-worker with the second happy trio, and her heart was filled with never-ending praise, as she beheld the bright little family, united in love to one another, and each little one endeavouring to help "Mama" and her companions.

Nine more months passed swiftly by, and again during this past autumn we found ourselves in Canada. Amid the joy of arriving safely at the dear Home with another party of boys and girls, seeing many of them depart for good situations, and happy homes, our thoughts naturally turned to the six at ——, and we longed not only to hear, but to see for ourselves how they were getting on.

In a few weeks' time the desired opportunity presented itself, and again after sundown on an evening late in September, we arrived at the well-remembered country station, where we were received with open arms by Mrs. A—— and Frankie and Freddie, the two boys. There was no moon, and the road seemed dark after leaving the bright lights of the "depôt," but soon we were at the large white gate, then, crossing the field, we entered once again the snug little dwelling. Passing through the outer parlour into the inner and best one, there sat the three little girls, each in her own small rocking chair, and the wee boy, barely three years old, all of them so changed and improved that we scarcely recognised them. They had been left quite alone for about twenty minutes, while mother and the two elder boys went to the station, and they had obeyed the injuction to remain quietly in their chairs, lest they should be tempted too near the stove, and get into any danger. All the three girls, two of them now six years old, and the other five, looked in the perfection of health; they were neatly and suitably clothed, and their fair hair, which a tender hand had evidently loved to caress, seemed to be one mass of clustering curls, around each broad brow. More than this, their little ways were gentle and confiding; no pushing of one another, no clamour, or unkind words were heard. All seemed to vie with one another in being happy and contented, in giving as little trouble as possible, and assisting each other, as far as lay in their power. The youngest boy, Howard, whom we remembered as a fretful, really ill-tempered and self-willed child, had been, apparently by some magic charm, transformed into the brightest, most loving and patient, winsome little fellow that one could possibly imagine. Time after time, we got him to give us his name, just to have the pleasure of hearing him repeat in his naïve way: "I'm Howard——Mama's wee baby-boy!"

"WE ARE SEVEN!"

But presently, sundry whispers and an exchange of glances between mother and children made us turn to examine the room and its occupants more closely, when, to our amazement, in a far-off corner, we discovered another wee boy. At our exclamation, "Who is this?" he timidly came forward, and, holding out his little hand, ventured to say in broad Scotch: "I'm Georgie Camell——Mama's wee Scotch laddie!"

We turned to Mrs. A—— for a solution of this mystery; how could it be that there were seven little ones (reminding us forcibly of the words in the well-known poem, "We are seven") when six only had been sent? She indulged in a hearty laugh at our surprise, and proceeded to explain: "Last Christmas, Papa came home after more than three months absence in North-East Canada. He made every effort to get home in time, himself to fill the little stockings which he knew would be hung up, in confiding expectancy, at the head of each bed. When he arrived, and I was standing talking to him, quite lost in joy in having him safe back, to share once more the responsibilities and cares of the family, I suddenly became aware that a very small sad-looking piece of humanity was hiding behind him. It was a white, weary, little face that turned shyly towards me; the clothes were poor, and soiled through the long journey, but, said my husband: 'You were wanting a very little one. See, I've brought him.' It was Christmas Eve. Could I refuse a gift from my Father to tend for Him, when I remembered the much greater gift which nearly 1900 years before He had bestowed on me? No, I clasped to my heart little Georgie, brought one thousand miles from far-off Nova Scotia; and though for many weeks I almost despaired of his life, so frail and weak was he, the Lord has brought us through, and now our family is the perfect number, one for every day in the week, as I tell my friends when they ask how many children there are at home."

DAILY CARES AND PLEASURES.

Saturday morning dawned. The long journey and the pleasant excitement of the previous evening had made us sleep heavily, but, as we awoke to the consciousness of where we were, the question arose: Is it possible that there are seven merry children in this quiet house? We lay still and listened for awhile. No noise, but light little steps were heard moving hither and thither, and gentle voices sounded, showing that all were astir and beginning the duties of the day. On rising we went to see how each one was occupied. Mother had her porridge and potatoes on the stove, cooking ready for breakfast, and had gone to milk the cow, a beautiful creature bought by Mr. A—— after the little ones had been received into the home, that they might have an abundance of sweet new milk. Frankie and Freddie were doing their morning "chores," feeding the horse, the young colt and the cow, tidying up the barn, &c. Flossie, with a broom just big enough for her, was sweeping and dusting the parlour. Maudie was dressing little Howard, while Flora, the merry little chatterbox, was looking on and chatting away to everybody.

After breakfast, reading, and prayer, the two boys finished their "chores," and took their slates to write. We were surprised to find how well they wrote for children only eight and nine years old. It was a good round hand; and very careful they were not to make a mistake in their copies. The education of these little ones is by no means neglected, although Mrs. A——'s hands are very full. Maudie reads extremely well. She is far ahead of most children of her age, and the others are in a fair way to follow. Freddie is found to be a remarkable boy. It is easy for him to be talking busily on one subject, while he is thinking out another, as hard as he can. He seems likely one day to become an engineer—all his tastes are in that direction. He needs care, however, for he is a boy who is easily led, either on the right or wrong road.

Frankie is a quick, clever child, and should with wise training, if spared to grow up to manhood, make a good business man. Flossie is evidently meant for a housekeeper. She is fast becoming a refined elegant little girl, but she dearly loves to have her small broom or her duster in her hand, and all she accomplishes is thoroughly well done for so small a girl.

Maudie's talents are more for book-learning. She does not like housework. She says, when she gets older, she will learn everything; for she is quite aware that she can never make a useful bright woman, like "Mama," if she gives way to her dislike of saucepans, dusting, brushes, &c. But she loves reading and writing, and she reads in her book, or the easy Bible-lessons, in a book-roll which hangs on the parlour wall, with great zest. She modulates her voice in what the Americans style "a cunning little way," and before commencing she repeats over her instructions:

Understand what you read about,
Pay attention to the pauses,
Read as if you're talking.

Mrs. A—— says she must be educated for a school teacher, a very honourable employment in Canada, where the schools are first class and every child attends day school, there being no such thing as having a governess to teach you at home.

Maudie thinks, too, that she might be a nurse some day, supposing that school-teaching should fail. She takes care of little Howard, considers him her special charge, and he warmly reciprocates her kindly attention to him.

Flora is only five years old, and at present reads in what is called the "first book." She is however a bright clever little girl. "Artist and musician" is what the phrenologist determines of her. "When she is twelve years old," says he, "she will draw your portrait so that you can't mistake it." She is a really lovely little girl, and, better than all, she is strictly truthful, which we cannot say of all of them. She would scorn to tell a lie, and so noble-hearted is she that she has been known on one occasion to bear punishment due to another, because she was believed worthy of blame, and neither by word or look would she implicate the guilty party.

Our young readers would no doubt like to hear a word about the children's amusements, as well as about their characters and their training.

First there is quite an army of dolls of various sizes, and a doll's carriage. Then there are picture books, which they have been taught to use carefully (not to tear them and throw them about, as we have seen some children do). When they look at the pictures they like someone to explain the meaning, and if there is a story connected with them they will listen with rapt attention whilst we read it to them. Then there are the canary birds; and it is part of their play to watch and feed them. And who shall tell the delights of the orchard and field, swinging in the hammock under the apple trees, and enjoying the luscious fruit?

In the afternoon the horse was hitched to the handsome new double buggy, and mother, visitor, and the seven children all went for a drive, and a very happy time they had.

PREPARING FOR THE SABBATH.

Saturday evening was a preparation for the Sabbath. All the little Sunday frocks and various clean garments were looked out, and hung by the little girls, each in her own corner, that there might be no confusion on Sunday morning. There was a simple white frock for summer wear, and a neat crimson cloth one for the cold weather. All the work was arranged to take as little time as possible on Sunday morning, for there was some necessary work to be done on the sacred day, such as feeding and watering the horse, milking the cow, &c.

Next morning, on leaving our room, we went straight to the kitchen, where we found Mrs. A—— making the porridge, and the little ones standing round, learning the golden text for their Sunday-school, in connection with the International Lesson for the day. As soon as breakfast and the various little duties were over, the "overalls" which had kept the best frocks nice and clean, were laid aside, the Sunday hats were donned, and we all started for church.

The children walked first, a sweet little procession. Frankie and Freddie, with wee Howard between them; next came the two bigger girls, Florrie and Maudie; while Flora and the little Scotchman brought up the rear. As we went along it was easy to see the interest these orphans had created in the village. Everyone we met seemed to know them, had a kind word for them, and their lingering glances of admiration at the dignified yet modest demeanour of both boys and girls were apparent to the most casual observer.

Arrived at the church, before we had time to enter, the boys' caps were off, and they walked in quietly, each one taking the accustomed place, without any confusion or hurry. One felt they had been trained to intelligent reverence in the house of God.

During the service it was touching to watch them. They sat so still, and, young as they were, they seemed to be listening, and trying to take in all they could, and their voices blended sweetly when a hymn was sung that they knew. After service came the Sunday-school for an hour. Here again the "London orphans," by which name they are known in the village, distinguished themselves; no other of the children present had taken the trouble to learn the Golden Text for the minister, but ours repeated it correctly.

At home again once more, we walked in the field till dinner was ready. Then, afterwards while dishes were washed, they wanted a nice story from one of their little books, and finally we all gathered in the best parlour for a time of singing, when we were astonished with the childrens' rendering of many sweet hymns—some of them quite new to us—their beloved mother accompanying them on the organ. One was very lovely—the second and fourth lines of each verse being the refrain which was taken up by all of them, the first and third line being sung as a solo, by each of the three girls in turn.

We closed with one sacred song lately brought out by an American evangelist, sung by the two elder boys, with perfect taste and harmony. The chorus for evermore will ring in our ears, sounded out by those clear ringing child-voices, repeated over and over again—

For the way is so delightful,
The way is so delightful
In the service of the Lord.

[This charming story, with a general statement of her work by Miss Macpherson, has been published as a neat booklet, called, "Lonely Hearts and Homes Filled." Copies may be had from the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, London, E.]

THE USES OF SORROW.

"Your sorrow shall be turned into joy."—JOHN xvi. 20.

GIVE thanks for sorrow—'tis the tender dew
That moisture gives unto the spirit's sod
The first vibration, though in music low,
Of the heart's harp under the hand of God.

Grief is a storm that strips our sin-wrapt souls,
Like ocean's waves its restless billows beat;
Onward it bears us, past life's rocks and shoals,
Bleeding and bruised, unto Immanuel's feet.

Grief is the cold, dark soil, where seed is hid,
That unto fairest blossoms shall unfold;
The furnace fierce that burns the spirit's dross,
And purifies it into chastened gold.

Grief is a valley, shadowy and dim,
With thorny paths, where weary feet must tread;
Yet all around the hills of promise rise,
And love's blue sky smiles calmly overhead.

Grief is a seraph pale, whose austere hand
Softens with sombre tints life's roseate ray;
That clouds the landscape of life's transient dream,
And opes the curtain of eternal day.

Grief is a mine where precious gems abound—
Treasure outweighing earth's luxurious spoils;
For in its depth a priceless Pearl is found,
Whose peerless worth repays the miner's toil.

Grief is a war where fadeless palms are won;
Eternal victories o'er death and strife:
Then the glad welcome, and the sweet "Well done"—
A crown of love, and everlasting life.

HOMES FOR AGED POOR.

TWENTY years ago, a single Home was opened in Notting-hill, for the accommodation of a few aged persons. A room, rent free, was provided for each inmate, to supplement their small savings, or the weekly income that could be procured from friends or former employers. The house was soon full, and now there are eight Homes, with 116 inmates, in various parts of London. At least a dozen similar ones, not affiliated to the parent Society, but working on the same lines, have sprung up as the result of the original effort, and are supported locally.

Though the work has grown and prospered, much help is still wanted, as more than seventy applicants press for admission, and not a room is vacant. A room rent free is the boon they ask for, and must be denied, unless the resources of the work largely increase. A visit to some of these Homes for the aged would, we are sure, secure help and sympathy from many. Freedom from care appears to add years to the life of our aged friends, for amongst the number there are twenty octogenarians.

The spiritual needs of the inmates are not forgotten; a weekly Bible-reading is held in most of the Homes, and there is reason to believe that in the years of quiet resting afforded by their shelter, many have sought and found a Saviour in the closing years of life.

Winter is once more upon us, and it is desired to supply the inmates of the Homes with coal, the most necessary of all necessaries to the aged, and a very expensive item, which their small means cannot meet.

The Homes are situated at 65, Walterton-road, St. Peter's-park; 9, 11, 13, 15, 17, Minford-gardens, Shepherd's-bush; and 25, and 27, St. George's-road, Notting-hill. The hon. secretaries are Miss E. G. and Miss S. A. Harrison, 5, Grandacre-terrace, Anerley, S.E.

REV. JAMES MUIR, St. James's Manse, Wakenham, British Guiana, labours among coolies. He says: "If we had Christian tracts and books in Hindi, much more work could be accomplished, as many of the people can read. A Brahmin and a young man have been converted through reading Hindi Gospels."

The Story of a Devoted Life.

By her Brother, Rev. JOHN MACPHERSON, Dundee.

CHAPTER VI.—PIONEERING.

THE SHOEMAKERS' SHOP.

ONE Sabbath night she came upon a company of shoemakers in a garret, busy at work. They had been drinking, and were in a hilarious mood—roaring and laughing, as they worked, with amazing enthusiasm. Had a spirit from the other world appeared, they could not have been more startled. She opened fire. They replied by using their hammers with deafening effect. Nothing daunted, she persevered. She appealed to their manliness: were they afraid of what a woman might say? Silence followed this appeal, and she poured forth a torrent of warning and entreaty. In reply, one of them, in a mocking strain, asked her if she would like to see them going barefoot.

She answered, "Better go barefoot to heaven than go well-shod to hell."

"Oh," exclaimed the mocker, "I mean to have my fun out to the end of the chapter!"

"Very well," she replied; "but what about the ending of the chapter? Did you ever see or hear of one making fun in the throes of death?"

No, he had not.

"Well then," she said, "why not?"

Solemn and kind words followed. So she won a victory, although probably enough it was only a temporary one. At all events she left with them something to think about, and there was quite a hush when she came away.

On Sabbath nights she frequently found women washing or baking. The sudden surprise left them no time to invent a decent excuse for desecrating the Lord's Day; and it was curious to see the too-quickly conceived lie sticking in the throat.

"Oh, what a rating I got from her!" said one to her neighbour; "she caught me baking, but she'll never catch me again."

At Christmas and New Year's time she frequently found the houses

SCENES OF REVELRY AND DRUNKENNESS

on the Lord's Day. Not seldom on those occasions she noticed side by side on the table a bottle of whisky and a copy of Burns' songs. One Sabbath night she came upon a company of men and women carousing. Pointing to the song-book and the bottle, she said:

"Are these your Bible and Sacrament?"

A deep silence followed the question: the revel was suspended. Most of those people, though they had sunk very low, retained some memory of better things. A little reverence for the things of God lingered in their very blood. In early life they had seen the snow-white cloth on the Lord's table; they had seen the elders amidst a solemn hush carrying round the memorials of the Saviour's death; and the Bible had still an awful meaning even for them. Not a voice was heard, not a head was lifted, while our visitor set before the revellers life and death—the blessing and the curse—and with tears pleaded with them to turn from their evil ways.

John M—— was a worthless, drunken fellow. One day in March, 1869, he was sitting in a public-house with one of his associates in sin. Suddenly a voice as if from out of the unseen world said to him:

"John, you'll have to drop this way of drinking."

He started to his feet, took his hat, and said to his companion: "William, I'm to drink no more with you or anybody else."

Looking at him in amazement, his friend said, "What's the matter with you, Jack?"

Without another word John left his comrade and the public-house, which he never again entered. The Spirit of God was now working in his conscience with great power. His sense of sin and danger was so overwhelming that he was no longer able to continue his work as a handloom weaver. Bending over his loom with his Bible in his hand, the tears streamed down his cheeks until his vest was wet and the water trickled from his clothes. His anguish continuing he left the workshop, and spent his time in wandering in the fields and praying for mercy behind hedges, making the solitude vocal with his cries. At length his strength failed; the protracted agony compelled him to take to his bed.

Our visitor took me to see them. He lay on a bed of rags. Every bone in his body, he said, ached—not because of the hard boards, but because of the spikes of his own sins on which he was now impaled. From sheer distress of soul—no longer able to work, or eat, or sleep—he was the image of despair. As he told me the story of his wicked life and his anguish, the very bed shook with the convulsions of his terror. No human voice could be more distinct to his ear than was the voice of an angry God speaking to his conscience. He was being borne, he said, by an invisible, irresistible power to the judgment seat, where in all justice God was bound to condemn him, and see him duly damned. He wished to repent, but could not; he felt he could as easily fetch tears out of a millstone as one pang of genuine godly sorrow out of his bad, bad heart. Besides, he believed it was too late in the day for him to repent; and there remained for him nothing but a "fearful looking for of judgment."

In a long conversation I endeavoured to show him the way of salvation by faith in Jesus Christ, bringing him face to face with this word: "God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish but have everlasting life"; and left with him the solemn alternative—to receive Christ or reject Him; to be crucified with Christ, or be a crucifier of Christ.

DRUNKEN JACK'S CONVERSION.

Hastening to the mission hall where we were then carrying on evangelistic services, I stopped the evangelist who was speaking, stated the case of John M——, and requested special prayer on his behalf. Next Sabbath morning he rose early, and sought retirement in the country. In a secluded spot by a dyke side, with a little brook babbling at his feet, he read his Bible, and cried to Heaven for his very life. Again and again he read, "God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son." Light dawned with "whosoever believeth." The name of Jesus now became indescribably precious; it came to him once and again with sweetness and power; it overcame him. He now took the Lord at his word, and found perfect rest. Here he remained till the afternoon, "weepin' an' sobbin'" for joy. Having washed his face in the stream, to remove the traces of weeping, he returned home; and as he was sitting down to dinner, in the garret where he resided with his family, he looked up to the little "skylight," the only window in the room. "Just then, as my eye caught a glimpse of those heavens where my blessed Jesus was, a second ray of Divine light fell on my heart. This so overpowered me that I had to quit my dinner, and rush off to my brother's house to tell him that

> My happy soul was free;
> For the Lord had pardoned me,
> Hallelujah to Jesus' Name!"

John M—— was henceforth a new man. After some years his health gave way, and being no longer capable of manual labour he employed his time in walking out into the country, visiting farm-houses and servants' bothies; distributing tracts; speaking for Christ, and offering prayer, as he found opportunity. Possessing a rare gift of forcible speech, he could set forth the plan of salvation in terms singularly clear, crisp, and telling. Thus he spent for God what time had been snatched so miraculously from the wreck of his life. His sudden arrest by the Holy Spirit in the public-house shows, what we have often seen, that in a time of gracious visitation God is pleased sometimes to work without any human agency. But John M—— owed much then and afterwards to the sympathy and aid in may ways of our visitor, Isabella.

A HINDU ON INDIA'S ENEMY.

A NATIVE of India, Hira Singh Puri, at present a student at Harley College, Bow, E., has the spiritual and moral welfare of his countrymen very near at heart. He hopes to labour for their enlightenment in the Gospel. In a communication to us, he describes strong drink as responsible for much of the misery and degradation which prevail in the country. True, all the sacred books of India denounce the use of intoxicating drinks, but the example of Europeans goes far to explain the growing folly and inconsistency of the people. Hira Singh Puri writes:—

"I have gone from one street to another, travelled from town to town, and talked upon the subject with high and low, educated and illiterate, Hindus, Mohammedans, Sikhs, Bengalis, and also with Christians. All, with one voice, attribute the present deplorable condition of my fatherland to the liquor traffic, and all long for the day when it will be swept from the land. Seeing with my own eyes the ravages drink has made upon my countrymen, I was moved to take up the cause of temperance and total abstinence, and fight it out in the name of the Almighty. Though feeble, weak, helpless, and poor in myself, yet I thank the Lord that He has blessed my exertions to a certain extent, and I mean to go on, waiting for the seventh day when the mighty walls of Jericho will fall prostrate at the mighty trumpet call of Jehovah.

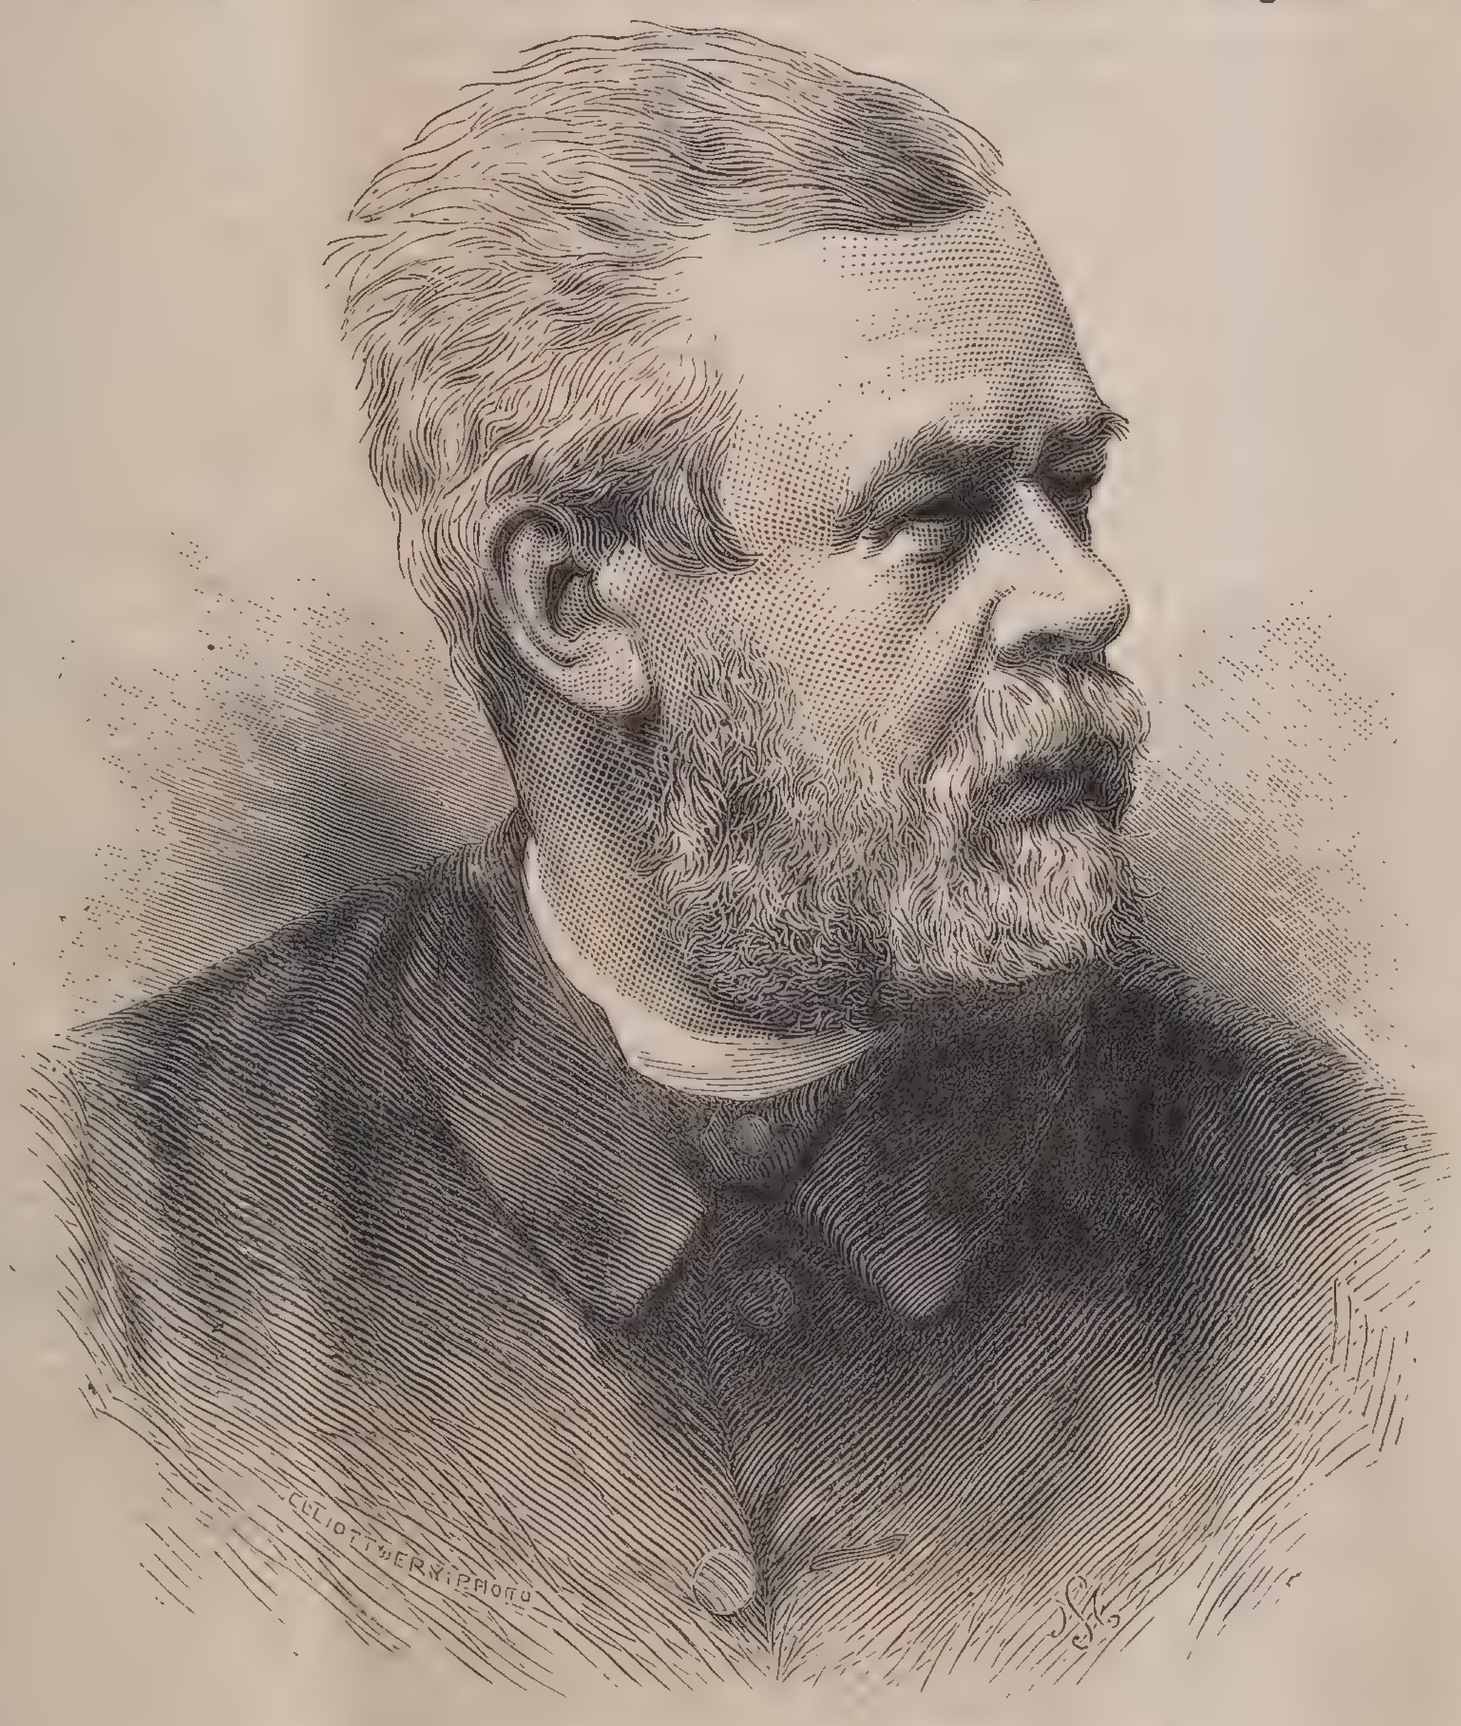
"It is no exaggeration to say that drunkenness is steadily increasing in India. Government officials bear witness to the statement; statistics are full of it; but experience is the proof. A walk down the streets of Lahore will reveal the fearful evil of the traffic. The story is told of a European, who, on finding that one of his servants had died through the drink, had every bottle remaining in his house destroyed, and resolved never again to touch the accursed thing. How noble it would be if every official in India would follow this example! Oh, that those who have introduced and support the liquor traffic in India, would also mend their ways while it is time!"

Hira Singh Puri is better known to Indian Christians by the name of Peters, which appellation he received from an English lady who had actively interested herself on his behalf, and aided him in his education.

CENTRAL AFRICA.—Long and interesting letters have been received from the agents of the Church Missionary Society on the shores of the Lake Victoria Nyanza. There has been fighting in Uganda, King Mwanga having taken steps to regain the throne from which he was deposed some months ago. The Roman Catholic priests have actively supported the movement, and, with many promises of future good conduct, the King (by whose order Bishop Hannington was murdered) has implored Messrs. Mackay and Gordon to join him. When the letters left, Messrs. Walker and Gordon, who were expelled from Uganda at the time of the revolution, were on their way to islands close to Uganda, where Mwanga and the native Christians were. Assuredly they will have the prayers of such as call upon Him who is King of kings and Lord of lords.

THE LATE CHARLES STANFORD. D.D.,

Of Denmark Place Church, Camberwell.



WHEN, in March, 1886, the subject of this sketch was summoned to his eternal rest, there came to many, even outside the boundaries of his social and congregational circle, a keen sense of personal loss and bereavement. His spoken sermons and his published writings had constituted him to these a true and helpful friend, and very genuine was the grief that a voice they loved to hear was for ever hushed, and that thoughts so inspiring and consolatory as his would flow forth no more for the enrichment of his fellow-Christians. What sorrow Dr. Stanford's death brought to his own much-attached congregation it would be impossible for anyone to say who did not belong to it.

The life of CHARLES STANFORD has now been given to the world in part,* and our only regret is (as was recently remarked in these columns) that the picture is not a fuller one. He was no ordinary man, and the world would be richer if it had the complete story of his earthly sojourn, especially in its earlier stages. But his sensitive, shrinking spirit recoiled from publicity in personal matters, and we must remain content. His wife has prepared these memories with a tender and loyal hand, and right welcome they are.

To Northampton belongs the honour of being his birthplace; he was born in 1823. His parents were of humble lineage and lowly in circumstance, but they seem to have been worthy progenitors of a worthy son. Says the biographer, "No hardship could dim the mother's gentle dignity of face and bearing, or quench the father's rare originality." Charles, it appears, never went to school in boyhood days, and his ardent struggle in later years to make up for this deficiency no doubt helped to weaken a frame never too robust. From childhood he displayed a singular artistic faculty, and if he had followed the bent of his genius in this line of things he would certainly have achieved success. As it was he became one of the most skilled artists in sacred speech that the modern pulpit has known. "Before he was sixteen he had been in a shoemaker's factory, in a lawyer's office, and in a bookseller's shop." His master in the last and most congenial of the three occupations perceived the wonderful promise in the lad, and, with other friends, made arrangements for his being sent to college. Before this, however, he had joined the membership of Doddridge Chapel, Northampton, his father and mother being received into fellowship at the same time. Doddridge Chapel was Independent, but he had been led by study of the Scripture to the adoption of Baptist views, and therefore his destination was Bristol College, which he entered in 1841, at the age of eighteen.

Here he made himself felt among his fellow-students as a "distinct personality," original in his thinking and speaking, and most attractive in his social qualities. His studies were interrupted for several months through illness; nevertheless, he was so heroically patient and industrious that before his full term of four years had expired he was released to enter on his first pastorate at Loughborough. This pastorate was brief but brilliant in its happy influence on that rural community. At the end of two years he had to seek change of air owing to a breakdown in health. After two or three months' interval, he accepted a hearty call to the pastorate of the united Presbyterian and Baptist Church, Devizes, where he lived and laboured for the space of eleven years. While the inward flame burned brightly, the outward casket continued feeble, so that we read in one of his letters to a friend of his being forced for a time "to live a comparatively indolent life"; he goes so far as pensively to anticipate the idea of "dying very young, having all hopes of usefulness blighted just as they were opening." To add to his trials, the beloved wife of his youth was taken away from him, so that he was completely laid aside and unfitted for public work. Nevertheless his influence was powerfully felt, and the congregation grew in zeal and good works. A new chapel was built, in consequence of some legal difficulties about the enlargement of the old one. Mr. Stanford had calls to other places, but these he resisted, and gave all the energies he could muster to the feeding of his loved flock and the advancement of Christ's cause among the churches in various ways. After a lonely life of five years he again married, and his second wife has been privileged to tell his interesting history to his numberless friends and admirers.

Early in 1858 the hand of Providence pointed in the direction of Camberwell, and after some hesitation he felt able to accept a cordial and harmonious call to become assistant and successor to the venerable Dr. Steane. He entered on the co-pastorate in May of that year, and for the rest of his life — twenty-eight years—gave his very best to the highly favoured church at Denmark-place. It is scarcely needful for us to go into detail as to the course of this happy and eminently fruitful ministry. In three or four years the senior pastor had to retire through increasing infirmity, and thenceforward the full burden of the pastorate devolved on Mr. Stanford. Here, as at Devizes, he had to endure spells of "distracting pain and depressing weakness," though his heart bore bravely up, and he was instant in all kinds of good work, so far as strength would permit. His rare preaching gifts of course brought him more than local fame, and he had to pay the penalty of genius in being asked to officiate here and there on special occasions. To his pulpit work he was able from time to time to add the service of "preaching through the press," to the great enjoyment of many who were never privileged to hear his musical and winsome voice. All his work was singularly marked by the subtle quality of sympathy, and some of his epistles reproduced in the biography are delightful specimens of the letter-writing ministry — a branch of Christian endeavour that is not made so much of as it ought to be. In connection with one of the many personal bereavements that fell to his life lot, the biographer tells how "sorrow and loss strengthened and beautified his whole being, and made him able to forget his weakness for the sake of others." He actively co-operated with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey during the ever-memorable services of these evangelists in 1875 at the big wooden tabernacle near Camberwell-green.

In 1878 the honorary degree of D.D. was conferred on Mr. Stanford by Brown University, Rhode Island, U.S.A. The following year his twenty-first anniversary at Denmark-place was celebrated by the opening of new schools and lecture hall, and many friends, old and new, rejoiced with him. In 1881 he accepted the vice-presidency of the London Baptist Association. Then it was discovered that the failing eyesight, which for some time had troubled him, was a more serious thing than he had anticipated. He underwent an operation, but there was no resultant restoration, and before very long he became practically a blind man. He suffered much, but stuck to his post. His fellow-churchmen of the London Baptist Association would not accept his declinature to take up the duties of the presidency, and he did his best to discharge these, all his writing and preparation for public address having to be done with the assistance of another. A typewriter was impressed into the service, and, after some practice, he found it a decided aid. Many loving friends were ready to supply as far as possible the irreparable loss of vision, and the routine of pastoral work was kept up in a wonderful way. In July, 1884, at a special gathering of friends, he was presented with a cheque for £1200 as an expression of heartfelt esteem.

In the spring of the following year an assistant pastor was appointed. The year that followed was the last of Dr. Stanford's life. He was active to the very last, though suffering greatly. His strength gave way in the spring of 1886, and his last sermon was preached on Sunday morning, March 7. The vital force was rapidly being spent, and on March 18 "he passed silently and gently through the gate of death into the life immortal." As we have already said, great and deep was the sorrow of all who knew him only to love, and revere, and admire. The affectionate tributes to his memory given in the volume before us, by such men as Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, Dr. Angus, Dr. Culross, and others, attest the high esteem in which his contemporaries held him. And what they have said is only an utterance of the general voice of the circle in which he moved.

Happily, Dr. Stanford has left behind him a lasting and worthy memorial of his life work in the volumes he was enabled to publish from time to time. They are among the choicest religious works of this generation, displaying a fine and lofty imagination, deep insight into the bottom truths of revelation, and a peculiar, indescribable charm of literary style. A list is given at the end of his biography of over thirty books or tractates that have come from his pen. Some of the principal of these we may name:—"Central Truths," "Symbols of Christ," "Homilies on Christian Work," "Voices from Calvary," "The Lord's Prayer," "Family Religion," "The Wit and Humour of Life," and "The Evening of our Lord's Ministry." Anyone who can possess himself of these or other of the soul-breathings of our translated friend will never lack the very best of good and helpful company, as he, evening by evening, finds himself a day's march nearer the blessed and eternal home whither their beloved author has gone.

MR. TOYE'S ORPHANAGE.

A LARGE number of friends responded to Mr. Toye's invitation, last Friday evening, to come and hear of the Lord's deelings with him during the past twelve months. These twenty years he has devoted his life to the care and nurture of poor, fatherless children; and though his eye is dimmer than it was, and his natural strength somewhat abated, yet there is apparently no lack of that strong faith towards God, and that largeness of heart towards the children, which have ever characterised his life.

The little children who receive his care all seemed to be enjoying robust health; and the store rooms which Mr. Toye delights to show where oatmeal and potatoes abound, were in that smiling condition which enables him to speak with a full heart. "I would have put off this meeting," said he, "if these bins had been empty—as they were not long ago. I would not have it appear that one shadow of doubt could rest upon my heavenly Father as to his care over us. Empty bins would not alter my faith in Him, but it might my visitors'."

The meeting which followed the tour of inspection was delightfully informal; the children sang, friends made occasional addresses, and Mr. Toye told his simple tale without any reference to programme. "I am not in very good health," he said; "but I am better than I have been. God has been faithful to me, as He ever has. You may ask me, Have I ever been in straits? I must reply, I have. Yet you have seen for yourselves that I have abundance at present. I asked that my stores should be filled when you came to see me, and God heard my request, and answered it. Some weeks ago my way seemed hedged up. From November 18 to 23, inclusive—these five days—how much money do you think was sent into the treasury? Only fivepence. I do not mind telling you now how my faith was tried, since I can also tell you how my path was made straight. At the end of these five dark days a registered letter came to the door. I opened it, and what do you think it contained? A cheque for £200. A dear friend sent it to me with a letter saying that he was moved to send this to me instead of leaving it to me in his will, as he originally intended. God knew all my troubles, and during these five days this letter was on its way to me from the South of France. Well, I had need for every penny of that amount. I never put any money away as reserve, and, truth to tell, the treasury became as low as ever. An inquiry came in at this time from a firm in London as to whether there was such an institution still in existence as 'The Home for the Fatherless.' I replied, Yes, that it was still here in Lewisham-road, and I forwarded some of my annual reports as well. The next post brought a letter containing a cheque for £100, which had been remitted from South Africa for me and my children under cover to these London merchants. £90 was for the children, £10 for my personal use. There is no doubt about it, it is as true as ever, 'Call upon me in the time of trouble, I will deliver thee.' Do not let us forget what follows: 'And thou shalt glorify me.'

"It is twenty years ago last August since I began to gather the children together. I lived then in Millwall; it was a time of great trial and privation. I made the cots then with my own hands which a hundred of these little ones sleep on now. I am glad to tell you that friends are very thoughtful about clothing for them. Stuff for dress I never buy, nor flannel. Parcel after parcel comes to the door. Sometimes I know whence it comes, sometimes I do not. Pinafores somehow do not come in as promptly as we require; these we have to purchase sometimes. You see this building in which we are so comfortable. Well, I may tell you it has all been built with my own hands, helped, of course, by my son and the boys. To put up these big beams the servants came and gave the needed additional strength. Do not think, I pray you, that I am making any boast about it. I am only doing the work the Lord would have me to do. Sometimes I was at a standstill, if there were no nails or timber, or no cement, and no money to buy with. I just waited till the Lord sent them. And now here is the house; you can try, any of you, if these walls are not well built, and substantial.

"We had some trouble about accommodation for the boys. We had to remove them to a separate roof, and there it was not so easy to maintain discipline. So I applied to Dr. Barnardo and to Mr. Fegan. Each took some, and others were taken charge of by friends—so our family consists of these you see now, 123 little girls."

Seeing so many present, Rev. A. Campbell Gray, who was among the visitors, said he was moved to do what Mr. Toye would not do—namely, take up a collection. This being approved of by Rev. George Elder, these gentlemen took their hats and gathered from the friends present a sum of over £7, which they handed over to Mr. Toye for the maintenance of his large and helpless family.

GOSPEL WORK AT BARNES.

DEAR SIR,—Would any of your readers help us by taking parcels of goods left from a sale of work held in the mission-hall here, in aid of Gospel work carried on in Barnes. We have a large quantity of clothing suitable for giving away, and fancy articles for Christmas presents, and should be grateful for orders. The clothing, &c., is really good, and very moderately priced. The work, for which help is greatly needed, has been carried on for more than ten years, and is ever increasing. It consists of a coffee-house and a mission-hall holding 300 people, in which evangelistic meetings are held every Sunday and Wednesday, during the year, conducted by members of the Evangelisation Society. Sunday-school, temperance meetings, &c., are also carried on. The work has been greatly blessed in the past, and much good we believe, has been done. HELEN A. WILKINSON, Hon. Sec.

Little Maidens at Work.

Having been invited to give a little help at an evening sewing-class for girls, I made my way one Thursday evening to a spot not very well known to many readers, and one, indeed, not bearing the best of reputations—namely, Woodberry Down, South Tottenham. This poetical name is a trifle misleading, there being no "woods" nearer than Highgate, and no "berries" (except at so much a pound!) for many a weary mile. The name "Down" may be appropriate enough, for, certainly, all the spare water seems to run "down" here, where it spreads itself leisurely out over the bits of waste ground, occasionally invading the forlorn-looking shops and half-empty houses.

Here, close to a busy, unclean thoroughfare, and a dirty little station, the good folks of Clapton Hall have established a Mission, and part of their errand of mercy to the hard-pressed toilers of this crowded neighbourhood has, happily, taken the form, not simply of "clothing the naked," but of teaching the naked to clothe themselves—an infinitely higher and more difficult attainment.

At seven o'clock, when I entered the hall, everything was in perfect readiness, and almost immediately the young workers trooped in. The space was arranged precisely as for a Sunday-school. Each child knew her own place, and took it at once without the slightest noise or confusion. Hymn-books were given out, and a hymn sung with the most perfect decorum and attention, though not set to a very attractive tune, and unaided by any instrument. While the children remained standing a lady engaged in prayer; and, though I have seen a good deal of work among children, I do not remember ever observing such perfect order maintained. There seemed not a whisper to be heard, though there could not have been much fewer than two hundred children present, and these, to a large extent, of a rough, neglected class, most of them from eight to twelve years of age. Their conduct was really a model to Sunday scholars.

Work now began and continued till 8.30. The time and attention of the teacher of each class were fully occupied in directing and encouraging little fingers, most of them employed on some garments for the worker's own use. Board School instruction had done much, even for the youngest; though several in my class, anxious to complete a flannel petticoat, were, as yet, ignorant of the mysteries of "herring-boning," or fell into the usual mistakes of beginners. Difficulties, however, were patiently overcome, and a good deal of work accomplished. These young folks were quite in earnest, and there was no idling or play. One small black-eyed damsel toiled away perseveringly in spite of a gathered finger, and kept up a running fire of gratuitous information about the class in general for my benefit. The nail of her poor little finger was, evidently, doomed, and as she had lost one before, this, she was confident, was the last that could ever grow! I comforted her with the assurance that nails do not come and go in sets, like teeth; but were always growing, and would be quickly replaced, a fact in which the small maiden found much consolation.

At 8.30 another hymn was sung, and a Gospel address given by a missionary who, happily, possessed the rare gift of speaking acceptably to the young. The same admirable order prevailed. To be sure one of my little toilers fell fast asleep, but the rest of them gave no trouble, and, indeed, seemed rather scandalised at their classmate's untimely slumbers, which, poor mite, I would not suffer them to disturb.

Such a Mission as this offers a fine opening for a practical Christian woman's energies. I say "practical," for the labour underlying such an organisation as that at Woodberry is no trifling matter. All honour to those who have taken it in hand, and who patiently continue such arduous duties, ministering at once to the bodily and the spiritual needs of their weak and ignorant, and often heavily-burdened sisters. Verily, "Whenever we will we may do them good." Might there not be a few more who "will," and who, in other localities, can start and carry forward, in Christ's name, such a gracious ministry to the little children?

THE RESCUE SOCIETY.

This useful Christian agency, which was founded by the late Daniel Cooper thirty-six years ago, has lately had many of its most liberal subscribers removed by death, one of whom, the late Mr. Herbert Clarke, was wont to say that he could not bear to think of any poor girl who applied being turned away through lack of funds. When, however, friends, whose united subscriptions amounted to £400 a year, have been taken away, it is obvious that their places will have to be filled by others, if the work, which naturally shows a tendency to grow, is to be carried on efficiently. At present eight Homes are kept up, besides a small hospital, and an average of £15 a day is needed to maintain the whole, without branching out into new enterprise. Each case costs on an average £7 10s., and a large proportion of the income is actually earned in the Homes by the girls themselves. In company with Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, the present secretary, at 79, Finsbury-pavement, we lately visited several of the Homes, and found them to be well adapted for their purpose, the matrons being sympathetic Christian women, whose hearts are evidently in their work.

The girls taken in hand are necessarily classified and kept together. In one Home, such as that at Woodford Wells, which has been re-built after the calamitous fire of January, 1888, we found an assemblage of very young girls who have been taken from evil surroundings, and who, in due time, will represent a good reward to those who saved them. At another Home at Stratford were a number of young women who had also been taken from bad associations, and who must inevitably have gone over to the ranks of vice if they had not found this door of escape. In another Home at Holloway there were those who had come from lower depths; but who happily, while the Gospel is what it is, may still be saved. In all instances, when they have undergone a sufficient training, all of these girls go out into situations; and, when only a very small proportion indeed disappoint their friends, it will be seen that money invested in such a service yields the best of interest.

The number rescued since the beginning has been not far short of 8000; and it is to be regretted that the Committee have sorrowfully to decline many cases, which they feel ought to be received. In the year 1883 there were 494 received, in 1887 the number was 542, but last year the total rose to 600. The interest of Christian people in these cases will be heightened when they learn that about 50 per cent. of the whole are not fallen, but purely rescue cases. Thus 292 out of the 600 received in 1888 were so; and by being placed in Preventive Homes, it is hoped that they will all take honourable stations in the world. The work would be of special value if it were only for the way in which it tests the adaptability of the Gospel to supply the sorest of human needs. Entire confidence is never felt in the ability of these girls to stand well in the world until they are converted; but when that change has taken place no fear is ever felt that they will ever fall again. The conversion to God of each is directly aimed at from the first day of her admission.

As the girls are all young, the world is before them, and many will rise to positions of useful service, which would have been impossible if no helping hand had been held out to them. In the case of the young women, many have come down because of evil surroundings, in the midst of which all things seemed to be against them. In the case of the children, some are rescued from bad houses, and others from drunken or degraded parents, who care nothing about them. Unless they are taken right away from such associations, some of these latter fall at a very early age, and naturally go from bad to worse until they sink prematurely into the grave. It seems to be a Christian privilege to help and save such as well as a duty.

A HUMBLE HEROINE.

The following pathetic incident appears in one of the graphic articles on "Justice for Workwomen," by "A Friend of the Poor," that have been appearing in The Daily Telegraph:—

"When in Hoxton Market the other day, I was introduced to a woman who was but a costermonger, yet her courage and nobility of character are, I venture to think, rarely to be found surpassed in any walk of life. She is of early middle life, robust, with rather pale features, a frank expression, lit up and heightened by her dark blue Irish eyes. Mrs. W—tt is one of those happy humble folk, who are spoken of as 'having found religion,' which in her case at any rate has proved a very great boon and blessing indeed to herself as well as to society. Poor as Mrs. W—tt is, she is always working and planning to help her still poorer neighbours.

"Two years ago an unhappy deserted mother died of consumption in one of the neighbouring tenements, leaving a wee baby girl of eight months without a soul in the world to care for the child—no, I am wrong; the doors of the workhouse could, no doubt, have been opened to the infant—and Mrs. W—tt's own motherly feelings led her to pity and tend the forlorn human mite. She took the baby from its squalid bed, where the dead woman lay, to her own home, and adopted the child. I found the little one, now a well-grown plump girl of three, asleep on a couch-bed, with a bandage round her temples. She had come in from play, tired and with an infantile headache, whereupon this good woman had bathed her brow and lulled her to rest.

"Nearly twelve months ago another poor mother died in the market, leaving a child, a girl of thirteen, to shift for herself. The father was a drunkard, and, as in the former case, had disappeared. What was to be done? No one seemed inclined to aid, so once more Mrs. W—tt came to the rescue and took charge of the girl. Yet Mrs. W—tt has two children of her own. Most mothers would possibly have argued their own offspring required all their attention. Fortunately Mrs. W—tt is of resolute, active habits; and she did not let the fact that her youngest is to-day only a lad of fourteen stand in the way of trying to do a most merciful kindness towards two hapless little children. The eldest girl is now about fourteen, and she is already earnestly endeavouring to requite her kind benefactress. To her Mrs. W—tt is the best of all mothers, and the child runs errands, helps at the barrow and stall, and does all sorts of odd jobs.

"Yet Mrs. W—tt is only a poor costermonger who trudges about selling vegetables, early and late, to earn a few shillings a week, whilst her husband also helps by his labour to add to their by-no-means-abundant store. How literally she has copied the command, 'Suffer little children to come unto Me.' I felt happy and honoured to have the privilege of shaking hands with this noble coster. If anyone cares to know more of her and the work she and other humble heroines are doing, let him go to Hoxton Market slums or look in at the Christian Institute there."

LOVE.

THERE is a love, a sorceress,
  There's witchery in her glance;
She leads her votaries far from truth,
  To regions of romance,
Where, "lost to use and name and fame,"
  They sleep, as in a trance.

But true love is a prophetess,
  Still better than she seems;
She guides her people to a land
  Far brighter than their dreams,
To walk in light, the holy light,
  In paradise that streams.

O love that satisfies the soul,
  Makes man what man should be!
O love, unmerited, unbought,
  Outgushing, full, and free!
O love of God to loveless man,
  We give our hearts to thee!

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.

THE usual monthly all-day meeting was held at the House of Rest on Friday last. The opportunities which these periodical gatherings offer to workers of getting apart and resting awhile, are embraced by Christians of all denominations, and eagerly seized by those who have learnt to appreciate their stimulating effects.

The morning hours were devoted to prayer for all forms of work and individual needs, the key-note of which was gratitude for past mercies, and expectation of future ones. The address was given by Miss MASON, who took for her subject the waiting for, and expecting, answer to prayer, as one appropriate to the closing meeting of the year. By many references, she proved that Christians were encouraged to hope—to have confidence in time of discouragement and distress. She also pointed out that they were not to consider unlikely things impossible of fulfilment, or to imagine that delays were denials of prayer.

In the afternoon Mr. C. RUSSELL HURDICH based some helpful remarks upon Acts i. Opportunity was then taken to submit to the meeting the scheme of providing a Home for Aged Workers, which Miss Mason hopes to establish very shortly. By this means those who have encountered the heat and burden of the day will enjoy a private room, fire, and light, free of rent; and will, in their declining and perhaps lonely years, be tended by kind and thoughtful hands. The outlay of £260 which Miss Mason has recently had to meet, in the new drainage for the houses in Cambridge-road, has crippled the funds set aside for the founding of the Home. Mr. Hurdich undertook the expense of furnishing one room, and his example stirred up others to render some assistance in the good work.

The second large meeting was held in the evening, when Mr. BENJAMIN HARRIS gave a stirring address on Matt. v. 8. A solemn time of heart-searching and consecration followed, and the day closed with manifested blessing after a time of rest and refreshment.

HUNGRY CHILDREN.—A correspondent who sympathises with the movement for feeding hungry school children, but is not in a position to give large help, has hit on the following plan which he commends to other families:—Having enough left after his own household breakfast to form a meal to a hungry child, he gets the head master of the nearest Board School to send to his house every morning a child who is known to be really in need of food. This not only benefits the child but brings the members of his family into direct contact with the poor, and awakens their practical sympathy. The writer says he supplies the master with small slips of paper, so that each child who comes may be the one selected, and imposition may be avoided.

REACHING CHINESE WOMEN.

WRITING on Oct. 8, from Foo-Chow, Miss Bradshaw says:—Next week I leave for Ku-Cheang. We are starting a native house there for foundling babies—the poor little girls who are cast away, or given over to drowning, as being useless and worthless. The work presses on all sides in Foo-Chow. The city is "walled up to heaven," yet in the most marked way God is opening doors. Only three weeks ago we were consulting how we could possibly get into the large Mandarin houses, in which are hundreds of ladies and women who have never had a chance of hearing the Gospel. Unlike houses at home, into which you can walk on a visit, each of these is surrounded with high walls and large gates, leading from one court-yard into another.

We consulted with the other missionaries who knew, and they said, "It is impossible to enter their houses unless you are first invited." I said, "Could we not go round as in a district at home?" They said, "Utterly impossible! They will not open their gates to a foreigner, for it is against custom." We came home tempted to be discouraged, but instead, we remembered the Lord, who is great, the same to-day as ever, and we definitely prayed that invitations to some of these large houses might be sent to us. This was on Monday. The following Sunday a messenger from a large house came, saying the ladies would very much like to see the foreigners. We got Mrs. Ahok to accompany us, and here we were passing into one large court-yard and out of another, until at last we were in the ladies' guest chamber. We all bent very low, shaking our hands and offering the necessary polite phrases, and as soon as such formalities were over, and all questions answered, we got to our "message." They had never heard—and, oh, the difficulty to their minds to take in the wondrous story! Shut up in these great houses, the ladies hardly ever go out; when they do, it is in tight, closed chairs. If they are ever to be reached, we must go to them. We have now had several invitations to their houses, but who is to go to them? Everyone in Foo-Chow is taken up with other work, schools, &c.

Oh, may the Lord soon thrust forth a band of Holy Ghost workers, who will take possession for Him of the thousands of Chinese women who, though gentle in manners, are living such worthless lives! Mrs. Ahok is now willing to break through the binding Chinese custom, and visit with one of us. It is wonderful to hear her pleadings in prayer with God, that He will send more ladies to reach those so dear to her own heart.

GOSPEL TEMPERANCE MISSION IN EDINBURGH.—Miss Brewster, of London, has conducted a series of meetings in the Scottish capital. Large audiences assembled, and a lively interest was awakened. At an evangelistic meeting in the Free Assembly Hall, Miss Brewster spoke with great power on drink, sin, and cheering the only effectual way of salvation for sinners, but also showing the way of salvation for saints, but also why, looking for the speedy coming of Christ, they should walk holy in the world.

STRATFORD FACTORY GIRLS.—For sixteen years a number of earnest Christian people have devoted their energies after business hours to work among young girls employed in factories at Stratford, E. The Mission Church, in Leyton-road, stands in the midst of a large working population, comparatively few of whom attend a place of worship or show any regard for sacred things. Meetings in connection with the Mission are held [illegible] week, and there is also a good congregation. From the report just published we learn that the only stagnation is in funds for a permanent building, which still remain at a very small sum. It would gladden the hearts of those who for so many years have striven hard to make the Mission a centre of true spiritual power, could they see it without delay established on a firmer basis. The co-operation of ladies able to guarantee assistance one or two evenings a week, is also much needed. Communications should be addressed to the hon. superintendent, Mr. J. Dowding-Sansom, Hazelmere, Atherton-road, Forest Gate, E.

THE NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS.

MR. J. E. WOLFE, who has for some time been engaged in evangelistic work among the North American Indians, is arranging a visit to Britain early next year. He expects to undertake Gospel effort, and also to make known the needs of that part of the mission field which lies nearest his heart. His sphere is among the Cherokees, in Indian Territory, and his labours, which are on unsectarian lines, have been blessed to large numbers of redskins.

Latterly Mr. Wolfe has received valuable assistance from Canada, five workers having joined him on the field, of which Vinita is the centre. There are about 100,000 Indians in the Territory, many of the tribes not including one Christian in their numbers. Among them there are many orphan children, and it is proposed to bring these under Christian influence. By the generosity of friends, a plot of land has been purchased on which to erect an Orphanage and Bible Institute. It is proposed to expend about £2000 on the structure, and the faith principle on which the missionaries work will extend to the raising of the much-needed institute. In a recent report, Mr. Wolfe says: "It certainly seems that the Good Master has made every provision necessary to encourage us to go ahead with this enterprise. On the farm we have coal, an abundance of good building stone, and a well of medicinal water."

Many desperadoes and men who have fled from justice find their way to the Indian Reserve, and some of the most lawless and dissolute of them have found pardon and rest in Christ. Mr. Wolfe says: "Rome is bending every energy, and putting forth her most strenuous efforts, to gather the red man into her fold. She owns and controls more property in the Territory than perhaps all the other denominations put together. Further, priests and nuns are constantly securing children of the wealthier class of Indians, and educating them in the nunnery schools of the adjoining States of Texas, Kansas, and Arkansas. As a result of this, many converts to Romanism are made." These facts show that it is high time something were done to enlighten the Indians. We trust Mr. Wolfe and his fellow workers will not have reason to mourn the lack of Christian sympathy with them. It is pleasing to learn that the improved policy of the United States during the last few years has arrested the decay of the race, and is even resulting in the steady growth of some of the tribes.

PLOUGHMEN IN PERTHSHIRE.—To the Christmas number of The Queen, the Duchess of Portland contributes interesting notes of an autumn in this central Scottish county. She tells of an excellent work among ploughmen begun by Miss Anderson, of Atholl-street, Dunkeld. Good books, embracing such subjects as travel, history, temperance, and religion are lent. After perusal, they are passed on to others. Most of these ploughmen live in "bothies," a species of poor barracks. The Duchess says they show great kindness to each other, especially if any are sick.

THE GUILD OF THE KING'S DAUGHTERS, recently formed in England, is on the lines of an American order which has thirty thousand members. In Britain the appeal is to well-trained and cultivated girls of the upper and middle classes. A beginning was made a few months ago at Southport, and the general aim is to promote active work for Christ. Working in groups of ten or five, under the leadership of a lady of experience, the young women devote themselves to visiting suitable cases among the poor, taking special cases in the children's ward of infirmaries, and cheering the helpless and lonely in their own rank, among their friends, by reading to them or taking them flowers. A "Daughter," also, in the name of the Lord, endeavours to shed brightness abroad in her home circle, and, in fact, to do good at all times. Particulars as to badges, pledges, &c., may be had from Miss Tatham, 19, Portland-street, Southport.

The Book World.

Finger Prayer Books.

The Oxford University Press have issued a miniature BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER in various styles and bidding, which is certainly the most exquisite and chaste little production of the kind we have ever seen. The tiny volume weighs in limp binding about three-quarters of an ounce, is one inch in breadth, three and a half in length, and one-third of an inch thick. It contains 670 pages, about as many as a volume of the library edition of Stubbs' Constitutional History, in type which, though minute, is clear, distinct, and perfectly legible. An edition is also issued without the calendar and occasional service, thus reducing both thickness and weight. The prices range from 1s. 6d. to 7s.

The Apocalypse.

THE REVELATION OF JOHN: An Exposition. By P. W. Grant. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. However our pre-millennarian readers may differ from this writer, they cannot but be charmed by his manifest candour and spiritual intelligence. The tone of the writer is eminently temperate and conciliatory, while for the historical school of interpretation as strong a case is made out as the circumstances admit of. Mr. Grant deserves to be recognised as an independent theological thinker. There are clear traces of independent study and research on almost every page. From Elliott, for whom he entertains a high respect, he frequently differs, and his criticisms have considerable force. We feel it to be well that all ways of looking at prophetic subjects and solving prophetic problems should be pondered; and, for the reason that this is a good book of its kind, we would commend it. At the same time, we confess that the historical system of expounding the Apocalypse seems to us somewhat to belittle the Book, and to necessitate shifts and extenuations, as well as sweeping generalisations, to which one's faith cannot always readily accommodate itself. That there is a shadowing forth of a historical scheme in the Revelation of John may possibly be true; but that also something more literal and exact, more commensurate with the tone and character of the descriptions, is to be expected in the times of the end of the age, is an aspect of the question which is now powerfully impressing multitudes of Bible students.

ISRAEL EEN VORST GODS.—We cordially welcome this translation into Dutch of Rev. F. B. Meyer's well-known book, "Israel, a Prince with God." It is the work of a devoted Christian lady, introduced to the religious public of Holland by a hearty preface from the pen of Mr. H. Pierson, of Zetten. Nijkerk: G. F. Callenbach.

JOHN BRIGHT: A NON-POLITICAL SKETCH. By Rev. Charles Bullock. 2s. "Home Words" Publishing Office, 7, Paternoster-square. The secondary title of this attractive book is meant to imply that political questions only occupy a subsidiary place in the very instructive story. The author's main object has been to depict the Christian and philanthropic side of Mr. Bright's character, and this he has done right well.

SCRIPTURE DOCTRINE OF THE TWO SACRAMENTS: A Plea for Unity. By Henry Harris, B.D., Rector of Winterbourne Bassett. 1s. Henry Frowde. Small as this book is, it is worth careful reading, and, though we do not agree with the author's explanation of "born of water," we rejoice to see he does not countenance in any way the "opus operatum" view. He does not desire peace at the expense of truth, but exhorts spiritual men of all churches to recognise anything Christlike in one another. His concluding quotations as to them that are "perfect" (Phil. iii 15, 16), and "them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in uncorruptness" (Eph. vi. 24), we heartily re-echo.

THREE GOOD BOOKS. Among recent publications from Drummond's Tract Depôt Stirling, are: GLIMPSES OF CHRIST, by H. K. Wood ("A Glasgow Merchant"), and THREEFOLD SALVATION, by the author of "Evanescent Philosophies" (1s. each). The teaching is vital, soundly expressed, and the manner so winsome as to render the books specially suited to instruct inquirers and young Christians. FARMER READ'S KINGDOM. By Charles R. Parsons 1s. 6d. A capital story. It describes a religious awakening, and is calculated to impress readers with the importance of seeking, before all else, the kingdom of God. The style is so lively that even careless people will feel impelled to complete the perusal.

LITTLE FOOTSTEPS. By Catharine Shaw. 1s. J. F. Shaw & Co. A very attractive book for the young. The playtime stories, with which its pages abound, are accompanied by many bright illustrations.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BIRTHDAY TEXT BOOK. Compiled by Edith Greeves. 1s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Union. Young disciples will find this a helpful book. There is a Scripture text for every day, and a suitable stanza from sacred poetry. The paper on which the birthdays are to be noted is good, and duly furnished with lines.

ALESSANDRO GAVAZZI: IN MEMORIAM. By request of the Committee of the Free Christian Church of Italy, Signor Lodovico Conti has compiled a volume which will have a special interest for those admirers of Gavazzi who can read several languages. Here, among copies of other documents, are articles descriptive of Gavazzi and his life-work, from Italian, English, French, and German publications. Venice: Paolo Sarpi.

ONE AND ALL: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF RICHARD TANGYE, OF BIRMINGHAM. 1s. 6d. Partridge & Co. Being a Cornishman, the author chose for the title of his stimulating little volume the motto of his native county. Mr. Tangye not only records a very remarkable career, but also the growth of a great industry, for, as head of a firm of mechanical engineers, he now enjoys a world-wide fame. The important moral which the book points is that, with the help of God, great things may be accomplished under the most disadvantageous circumstances. Lessons of patience and perseverance are admirably conveyed. Many a young man would doubtless be the better for reading this useful book.

A BOOK FOR BOYS AND GIRLS; OR, COUNTRY RHYMES FOR CHILDREN. By John Bunyan. 3s. 6d. Elliot Stock. By this curious book the author of "The Pilgrim's Progress" appears in a new light before nineteenth century readers. Bibliographers and students have long been puzzled to account satisfactorily for the presence of this title in the earlier lists of Bunyan's works. At length a copy of the long-missing book has been unearthed, and safely deposited in the British Museum. This edition is a reproduction, in facsimile, and furnished with an interesting introduction by Dr. John Brown, of Bedford. Much good sense and spiritual wisdom is conveyed in quaint and forcible style in these homely, and sometimes rugged, rhymes.

HERBERT FRY'S ROYAL GUIDE TO THE LONDON CHARITIES—1888-9. Edited by John Lane. 1s. 6d. Chatto & Windus. The twenty-sixth annual edition of a very useful book of reference. The arrangement is alphabetical, and the names and particulars are given of upwards of a thousand institutions, all more or less, and many of them entirely, dependent upon the voluntary contributions of the benevolent. In some prefatory remarks the editor says: "It is undisputable that, despite the large amount given, the contributions to the Charities of London are not in proportion to the constantly increasing demands for their aid, incident to the ever-increasing number of its gigantic population; and it is also indisputable that the charity of this great Metropolis is not commensurate with its vast and ever-increasing wealth."

A TREATISE ON PREDESTINATION, ELECTION, AND GRACE. By W. A. Copinger. 10s. 6d. Nisbet. At once historical, doctrinal, and practical, this work testifies to good scholarship, sound judgment, and deep spirituality on the part of its author. Views which are held by different sections of the Christian Church are examined with singular impartiality, and then, desiderating such an expression of doctrine as shall give due weight to all parts of Holy Writ, including passages which are ever instanced, by way of "objections," on the one hand to Calvinism, and on the other to Arminianism. The author sets out what he regards as the truth in its comprehensive simplicity. Rejecting unconditional predestination, he holds that privilege, and not eternal life, is the direct object of election; then, claiming that man has a real power of choice between good and evil, he contends that though "final perseverance" is according to God's will, it is not to be held as nullifying such warnings as "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." He shows with much power that all efforts in the way of spiritual life and strength must be ineffectual without the inworking of the free grace of God; hence he is no Pelagian. He maintains, however, that man is free to accept or reject Divine grace. Argument proceeds but lightly through these deeply instructive pages, and while the philosophical inferences of old teachers are thrown aside, no other speculations are introduced in their place. The book will prove specially welcome to earnest students of Holy Writ; if the subjects are mysterious, the treatment is always reverent. A very valuable bibliography (over 200 pages) is added, on the subjects dealt with in the book and several allied doctrines.

CHERRYBURN, AND OTHER STORIES. By Mrs. Austin Dobson. (1s. Religious Tract Society.) These are capital stories, uniformly "improved" to illustrate Christian truth. The teaching is as precise as the narratives are attractive. It would be well for the rising generation if such stories as these were circulated so widely that but a poor chance was left for the trash which is so sadly popular. MEND MY SHOE (same author and publisher) is a small book of a similarly wholesome and useful type.

CHRISTMAS AND NEW YEAR CARDS. Mr. Kaufmann, of 30, Paternoster-square, London, has again produced some attractive varieties of these. They are all of a distinctly Christian character, and therefore well suited for our readers. We may specially mention the shilling packets, entitled "Words of Peace and Blessing," and "Our Burden-Bearer." There are also some very nice sixpenny packets: among these are "Wondrous Love," "The Way of Life," and "The Friend of Children." Some superior sheets of Reward Tickets cost 2d.

REV. JOHN MCNEILL'S SERMONS, delivered at Regent-square Church on Sunday mornings, are published weekly by Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co. in penny numbers. So far, they do not exhibit any profound or scholarly incursions into the regions of doctrinal metaphysics, but are eminently popular expositions of Scripture narratives, with practical applications to present-day wants and duties. They are full of pointed, pithy sayings, and rousing appeals. We commend them as capital Gospel tracts for general distribution.

A CENTURY OF CHRISTIAN PROGRESS. By Rev. James Johnston. 1s. Nisbet. The object of this book, which we are glad to find has reached its second edition, is to encourage hope in the evangelisation of all nations by showing the progress which Christianity as a whole has made in the past, and especially during the last century; also to exhibit the growing ascendency of Protestantism, and, owing to its slow rate of increase, the relative decline of Popery. The pages convey many words of warning as well as instance substantial grounds of hope in the fruitfulness of present-day effort. Whatever hesitation some readers may experience in receiving some of Mr. Johnston's inferences, there can be no questioning the eloquence of the body of facts and figures here collected.

FRIENDS AND FRIENDSHIP. By Mrs. Alexander Russell Simpson. 1s. Nisbet. An inspiring little work, from the pen of an accomplished interpreter of the spiritual mind and its aspirations. In these chapters, the diction of which well befits the sublimity of the topic, we are introduced to many phases of a grand subject. The most beautiful illustrations of friendship which the Scriptures afford are dwelt upon, and, while we hasten to peruse the pages on "The Friend of Friends," and further, what is said of "His Friends," we are also eager to read the succeeding pages on the communion of saints and other glorious themes. The book will unquestionably minister refreshment to many who walk in the faith of Abraham the friend of God, and strive, as friends of Christ, to do His commands.

MODERN THOUGHT AND MODERN THINKERS. Explanatory Sketches by Joseph F. Charles. 2s. 6d. Relfe Bros. Persons desiring to read a fairly impartial statement of the religious and philosophical questions which occupy so large a place in modern literature, are likely to find what they require in this handy volume. Without avowedly setting himself for the defence of any theory, or endeavouring on his own part to suggest any conclusion, the author describes Puseyism, Rationalism and Spiritualism, in their various developments, as they cluster round historic names. Among many philosophical and speculative subjects, he lucidly explains Positivism and Evolution. On the one hand, the book shows the dreary goal of the much-vaunted negative criticism in regard to the Holy Scriptures; on the other, it affords evidence of the lengths to which men who are known as philosophers dare to go in their endeavours to account for the universe without entertaining the idea of an Omnipotent Creator. On these accounts the book is likely to prove useful in the hands of discerning readers.

TWO CONCEITED PUPPIES. By Rev. F. Langbridge, M.A. 3s. "Home Words" Office. Children will easily recognise the lessons conveyed by this narration of the painful experiences and virtuous resolutions of two dogs who did not know when they were well off. Some parts of the story are very amusing.

THE BIBLICAL ILLUSTRATOR: ST. LUKE. Vol. iii. By Rev. J. S. Exell, M.A. 7s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. This is the concluding volume of a work on Luke's Gospel of great practical utility. Altogether there are over 2200 large and full pages of matter. The three volumes would form a welcome present to many a preacher.

PRAYERS FOR THE USE OF CHRISTIAN FAMILIES. 3s. 6d. Wesleyan Methodist Book Room. Set forms of prayer cannot adequately express the ever-varying needs of individual supplicants at the throne of grace. Nevertheless, many believers will enjoy an occasional perusal of the petitions in this book. There are morning and evening prayers for nine weeks, as well as for special occasions. The introduction on family prayer is very instructive. We could wish that its excellent counsels were persistently urged upon professing Christians in general.

SECRET PRAYER. By H. C. G. Moule, M.A. Seeley & Co. How shall we order unseen prayer to our unseen Father? To answer this is the burden of this precious book, which we joyfully hail as eminently calculated to help such as are thirsting for "a closer walk with God." It is impossible to indicate in a few lines the wealth of heart-counsel compressed into this little volume by the Principal of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. Therefore, we think it far better to advise our readers to secure the book. The Holy Spirit will, without doubt, render its pages a definite means of grace to such as prayerfully peruse them.

CHRIST UNVEILED; or, Thoughts on the Tabernacle. By J. Denham Smith. 5s. J. E. Hawkins. These meditations contain the latest words of ministry of one who was greatly honoured of the Lord and highly esteemed by believers far and near. Mr. F. C. Bland, in a brief preface, says: "They are his last utterances on earth, dictated from his dying bed, or, to speak more truly, from the gate of heaven." The pages afford abundant evidence that, despite his sufferings, the author enjoyed a luxuriant peace during the weary illness which preceded his departure. In fourteen chapters, conveniently divided up into sections, this beautiful volume presents an analysis of the Tabernacle with an elucidation of its symbols, which are shown to prefigure the person, work, and offices of Christ. The solemnities of the propitiatory work of Christ are admirably expounded, and the delights of salvation brought well into view. In a word, the book deals with the choice themes of revelation, and is sure to meet with many appreciative readers among such as are of like precious faith with its God-instructed author.

THE HOLY ASHES: an Old Testament Study for the New Year. By Pastor Frank H. White. 1d. Partridge. "Conscience makes cowards of us all." But it is essential to have a quick and tender conscience, and to know the provision God has made to give it peace in order to abiding communion with Himself. Pastor White has here expounded the Divine antidote for a defiled conscience as typified in the red heifer of Numbers xix. We heartily commend it as a wise Scriptural exposition, suitable for meditation any and every day of the year.

FLOODGATES OF POWER. By Rev. Charles Fox. 2d. Partridge. Mr. Fox does not pose as a "scholar," but in hundreds of pages of the pretentious shallownesses of the so-called "higher criticism" there is not a tithe of the spiritual thought to be found in one of Mr. Fox's New Year booklets. Their fruit is food and their leaf is medicine. They are well worthy a more permanent form than that of New Year tracts, and the present one, which sets forth the principles and practice of Divine Power, is an exceedingly valuable and timely addition to the series. Those who send it to their friends will convey to them a New Year's blessing.

BEHIND THE VEIL. By Emily S. Holt. 3s. 6d. J. F. Shaw & Co. On the basis of romantic fact, Miss Holt has built up a very pretty and idyllic old-time story of knightly and generous chivalry. The tale is of the days of the Norman Conquest—a period big with fate for the future of old England. The author displays all her wonted skill in delineating character, and in describing the ways and manners of the far past. We know no more delightful antiquarian guide. The high tone of the story and the glimpses it gives into the social life of a less privileged, but also less pretentious age, make it a worthy companion of the other charming products of her pen.

MESSRS. J. F. SHAW AND CO.

THE END CROWNS ALL. By Emma Marshall. 5s. The life-story of a beautiful and high-minded woman. Abounding in incident, wholesome in tone, and eminently elevating in drift, those well-written pages will, we are sure, be read with special pleasure and profit by young people. The heroine attains a goal of happiness and usefulness by a path full of thorns and briars.—LILIAN'S HOPE. By Catharine Shaw. 3s. 6d. Another vivacious story from a facile pen. Varied scenes and situations yield lessons for time and eternity.—MISS MOLLIE AND HER BOYS. By L. Marston. 3s. 6d. The love of God is charmingly illustrated by a recital of the loving devotion of a young woman who bestowed affectionate care upon some poor lonely lads.—BERNE'S BARGAIN. By Jennie Chappell. 3s. 6d. The hero bought a photographic camera; the circumstances and consequences are detailed with much animation. Occasionally rather exciting, the tale has moral and spiritual elements in instructive proportion.—OLD CHRISTIE'S CABIN. By Emily Brodie. 2s. 6d. A capital book for young people, depicting the loveliness of a ministering life on the part of some happy children.—RUTH'S LITTLE LADY, by Evelyn Everett-Green; and LITTLE MINNIE, by N. D'Anvers (2s. each) are attractive books.—In LITTLE RADIANCE (1s. 6d.), Jennie Chappell pleasantly relates a year in a child's life. ROBERT'S RACE (1s. 6d.), by Emma Marshall, a book for boys, shows the evil of yielding to temptation.—NEVER AND FOREVER. By Grace Stebbing. (1s.) A vigorous little performance by a familiar writer. It is a lively story, giving interesting glimpses of the life of the London street boy.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

OUR OWN MAGAZINE. Vol. x. 2s. Children's Special Service Mission. While rejoicing to realise the extended usefulness of this monthly, we would strongly recommend the placing of the annual volumes in the hands of young people. The pages are devoted to short and sparkling articles, true narratives well worth reading, and many contributions illustrative of Scripture teaching.

OUR BOYS' MAGAZINE. (Vol. iii. 2s.) C.S.S.M., 13a, Warwick-lane, E.C. The "University men" who edit this monthly paper are in a position which gives them an exceptional influence. They have themselves left school long enough to begin to see the serious side of life (without entering upon that despised stage which the schoolboy describes as appertaining to "old fogies"), but not long enough to have forgotten schoolboy needs, feelings, and susceptibilities. The magazine is the especial organ of the "Schoolboys' Scripture Union," and we warmly commend it to the attention of Christian parents who are anxious about the spiritual growth of their boys at school.

OUR LITTLE DOTS. 2s. Religious Tract Society. The pages are lively, and appeal eloquently to the inmates of the nursery.

THE COTTAGER AND ARTISAN. The volume will have a special attraction for the aged, and those who do little reading. The style is simple, and the influence always good. (1s. Religious Tract Society.)

THE CHILD'S COMPANION. 2s. Religious Tract Society. The annual volume will give great joy to those for whom this periodical is especially intended. The outside is gay, in pleasant harmony with the contents.

THE TRACT MAGAZINE well deserves the high reputation it enjoys. Among notable features may be mentioned a series of Biblical Readings, and a number of Biographical Sketches. (1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

FRIENDLY GREETINGS. The half-yearly volume of this excellent monthly is a collection of very useful readings for the people. Every page is bright with illustration, as well as rich in pointed narrative and instruction. The coloured plates add greatly to the attractiveness of the volume. (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.)

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS. 1s. Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union. There is no more attractive annual volume to be purchased at so small a sum. The reading is eminently suited to interest and instruct the little ones, whom the pictures are sure to delight.

FAITHFUL WORDS. Vol. 18. Holness. Here is good reading for old and young. The articles, which are original and true, include many experimental narratives and Scripture expositions. Christian workers will find the monthly issue suggestive, while the annual volume will afford welcome and inspiring reading for the leisure hour in many a home circle.

CHRISTIAN PROGRESS. 1889. 1s. 9d. Bemrose & Sons. This magazine of encouragement in Christian life, testimony, and work is edited by Rev. Ernest Boys. Members of the Scripture Reading and Prayer Union will find its pages specially helpful. In the matter of the disciple's attitude to God, the editor is content with nothing short of the holy example of Christ.

THE HOME VISITOR. Vol. 16, new series. This illustrated magazine, conducted by clergymen of the Church of England, will be welcome in many a home. The contents are bright and varied, and the volume should not be overlooked in the replenishing of village libraries. W. Hunt & Co.

Three capital annuals have been issued from Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. THE BRITISH MESSENGER (1s. 6d.) is replete with good matter. We should rejoice to learn that the pure and peaceable influence of this periodical were ever deepening and extending.—THE GOSPEL TRUMPET (1s.) justifies its title from first to last. The pages present the message of salvation with great force, and always in an inviting manner.—GOOD NEWS (4d.) contains valuable articles on Gospel subjects. All these volumes contain numerous illustrations.

REST AND REAPING. Many a child of God finds this excellent monthly a welcome visitor throughout the year. Miss Mason is a helpful teacher, and very successful in securing contributors of the true spiritual type. Like the Word which it so grandly magnifies, this magazine is "profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, and for instruction which is in righteousness." Moreover, its pages are so eminently practical that those who are influenced by the spirit which pervades them will assuredly be "completely furnished unto every good work." The various interests of the House of Rest, Kilburn, receive due attention, and women's work for Christ is a special feature. We trust this useful periodical, as well as its attractive yearly volume, will have an increasing circle of readers. (Monthly, 1d.; annual volume, 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

SHOWELL'S HOUSEKEEPER'S ACCOUNT BOOK. 2s. J. S. Virtue & Co. Here are complete tables of expenditure during 1890, with hints on household economy. Stewards and housekeepers will find it useful.

THE HELPING HAND is the title of a booklet presenting stories of the good work done in the Coombe Boys' Home, Dublin. Copies may be had from Mrs. Ellen Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

ROYAL GRANTS, 1889. The Hansard Publishing Union, Limited, has issued, in volume form, the debates and proceedings in Parliament, on the provisions to be made for the children of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales.

Mr. J. Forbes Moncrieff has written two admirable New Year addresses to the young. BETTER THAN RUBIES (1d.) is issued from the Drummond Tract Depôt, Stirling, and BE NOT DECEIVED (1½d.) is published by C. Glass & Co., 33, East Howard-street, Glasgow.

The Religious Tract Society has issued four series of coloured and monotint booklets for all seasons. One series is specially for the new year, two are for the young, and another is for the little ones. All are beautiful, alike in design and execution. Shilling packets contain from three to twelve.

Among Penny Calendars for next year may be mentioned THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S SHEET ALMANAC, THE CHILD'S COMPANION ALMANAC, and THE PEOPLE'S ALMANAC. These are all profusely illustrated, and published by the Religious Tract Society. The "FAITHFUL WORDS" ALMANAC is an attractive sheet, issued by Mr. A. Holness. The "FRIENDS OF MISSIONS" ALMANAC has several features of great interest. (S. W. Partridge & Co.)

OUR DIOCESE, OUR CHURCH, OUR TIMES. This is the title of an address delivered by the Bishop of Liverpool at the opening of the recent diocesan conference. It contains plain words on each head, and is specially interesting as to "our times." Dr. Ryle urges his fellow Christians to stand fast in the maintenance of the old-fashioned doctrins of revealed truth, and in the maintenance of a high standard of practical religion, such as is not ashamed of regarding the Ten Commandments as the Christian's best rule of life and test of true faith. Having intimated that as the evening of his life draws near he is not likely to have many more opportunities of addressing his diocese, he concludes: "If it were my last word, I would say, as dying Sir Henry Lawrence said in the cantonments of Lucknow: 'Never, never, never surrender.'" (6d. W. Hunt & Co.)

Letters to the Editor.

RAILWAY MISSION WORK.

DEAR SIR,—Please let me say, with reference to a paragraph which lately appeared in THE CHRISTIAN, suggesting Railway Mission work at Crewe, that a branch of our Mission already exists there, conducted by some of the Railway employés, and is doing a good work. These men have, however, very little spare time to devote to religious duties, and a great and pressing need exists for a missionary to labour constantly and systematically among the ten thousand men employed.

There are several other almost equally large railway centres where missionaries are sorely needed. The Committee are very anxious to be in a position to meet this need, and earnestly hope that funds will speedily be provided for supplying these places with suitable workers, and so helping spiritually a body of men to whom the public owe so much, but who are deprived of ordinary spiritual privileges and opportunities by the nature of their duties. The treasurer is Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard.
—Yours faithfully, R. NIXON, Gen. Sec.
Railway Mission, 18, New Bridge-st., E.C.

RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE IN BOHEMIA.

SIR,—The Council of the Evangelical Alliance will be much obliged if you will allow me to state the following facts, which have an important bearing upon religious liberty in the Austrian Empire;—

Until the middle of last year Protestants in Bohemia were permitted to conduct family worship in their own houses in the presence of "invited guests." Then an order was issued by the Governor of Bohemia forbidding Mr. Freytag, an evangelist, any longer to exercise that right. For years neighbours and other invited guests of this lay preacher had been in the habit of attending family worship in his humble dwelling, and listening to a simple Bible exposition. In 1879 the Governor declared that the Protestants had such a right of private meeting, and could use it without the sanction of the local authorities, whose decision to the contrary he then reversed.

There has been no change in the law, but in the interpretation of it; and it is evident that a reactionary policy has set in. Last year the Governor ordered Mr. Freytag to discontinue his family worship, and that decision has just been confirmed on appeal to the Ministry in Vienna. This result is disappointing to all interested in religious freedom.

It is asserted that the evangelist "had exceeded the right of private meeting, because he had a special room for worship." But this statement is unfounded. Mr. Freytag's house consists of two rooms (with a kitchen), and he has there to find accommodation for himself, wife, and four children. The room in which family worship takes place serves also the purposes of dining, study, and sleeping.

As our correspondent points out, if this decision is allowed to hold good, he will have to exclude from his family worship members of the Church of England now staying in his house, and also his servant, who is a Moravian.

The Free Reformed Church, of which Mr. Freytag is a lay preacher (and which in teaching is similar to the Presbyterian and Congregational Churches of Great Britain and America), has twenty-seven out stations, and if the recent policy is carried into effect, there will be, in many places in the Austrian Empire, a distinct infringement of the religious freedom enjoyed. But, sir, we cannot believe that the enlightened statesmen of Austria, and the kind-hearted Emperor Francis Joseph, who has shown on former occasions a sincere desire to do justice to all his subjects, will permit so flagrant a violation of religious liberty to continue.

One other point deserves to be mentioned. In several cases, lately, persons leaving the Roman Catholic Church to join the Free Reformed Church have been compelled to undergo a medical examination, to see if they were in their right minds!

Knowing the vast power of the press, and the influence of public opinion, we ask your permission to state these facts, fully believing that the able and far-seeing statesmen of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, who, on former occasions, have acted in a sense favourable to religious freedom, will not now let enlightened Europe witness such a retrograde policy as is indicated by the recent proceeding of certain officials at Vienna.

A. J. ARNOLD, Secretary.
Evangelical Alliance, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

ELGIN MINISTERS AND EVANGELISM.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me a line or two in reference to the paragraph, signed by John Scott, in a recent issue? Your correspondent, describing a series of meetings held here by some evangelists of both sexes, all of them more or less strangers to the community, alludes to the "happy enthusiasm" of these meetings, and comments on the non-attendance of the local clergy. While sorry to enter into a controversy with Mr. Scott, who is an esteemed Christian worker, I felt it my duty to write him a letter, in which I put the following questions:—

(1) Whether, while some of the local clergy were present at the meetings, gross and ridiculous assertions were made as to ministers; and, especially, as to their preference of the rich to the poor—the speaker drawing a contrast between their alleged conduct and his own? Whether the attacks in question passed unrepudiated by those who sat on the platform along with the speaker? And whether Mr. Scott thought that any evangelist, working with such weapons, has a right to complain if the class whose hands they openly weaken do not see their way to attend?

(2) Whether, while getting their meetings generally and repeatedly intimated by the ministers, and expecting, though not inviting them, to be present, the evangelists gave to the ministers the personal "countenance" they complain that the ministers withhold from them, by attending any of the ordinary Sunday services in the town?

(3) Whether, in cases of alleged awakening or anxiety, they ever communicate with the pastors of anxious persons, or advise such persons to see their pastors for themselves?

To this Mr. Scott has replied, in a letter the sincerity and courtesy of which I readily recognise, but which gives no real satisfaction as to the points at issue.

I might say more, but content myself with adding merely that my ministerial brethren (there are some fifteen of them in Elgin altogether, active or retired) are as earnest, harmonious, and public-spirited a body of men as are likely to be found anywhere; that some of them, both in the town and neighbourhood, are prominently associated with evangelistic work; and that it is not difficult to win their co-operation in the case of movements which they believe to be conducted in an orderly, Scriptural, and permanently useful way.—Yours truly, WILLIAM A. GRAY.
South Free Manse, Elgin, N.B.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In America a determined effort is being made to restrict, if not exclude, exhibits of intoxicants at the proposed World's Exhibition in 1892.

A Metropolitan Sunday Closing Association has been formed, with a special view to thwart any attempt that may be made to exclude London from the action of Mr. Stevenson's Bill for England.

Mr. Richard Coad is having a good time in New Zealand. He has held missions in various centres in the island, and his visit is described as "a great blessing to the colony." After concluding in New Zealand, Mr. Coad was to proceed to Australia.

At the recent quarterly meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission a most encouraging report was given of the quiet, patient work undertaken by many of the members. New branches have been formed at Sale and Old Trafford.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A well-attended muster of "The Christian Harbour Lights" was held on Thursday last, at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks. Mr. James Townley, Mrs. H. W. Maynard, and others, gave stirring Gospel addresses, and several seamen (English and foreign) briefly bore witness to the blessedness of the Christian life, and earnestly exhorted their unconverted shipmates to turn unto the Lord. Several new members were enrolled at the close of the meeting.

LOWER BRITTANY.—Pasteur Lecoat, of Tremel, has just issued an interesting little work upon this subject, bearing the title of "La Bretagne." It is written in French, but an able translation into English by Mr. H. Ball, of Bath, appears in alternate pages. The moral degradation of this benighted people is graphically set forth. The history of what has been done to remedy this state of things, and some of the known results, are presented. The book is a guide to the intending visitor, and as such is full of practical interest.

Evangelistic Notes.

Rev. Dr. Fulton has been in Toronto for five weeks, and has held revival services in the Immanuel Baptist Church.

Grimsby.—A fourteen days' mission is being conducted in Flottergate Church by Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker. Rev. J. P. Bellingham and the members of the church are labouring heartily with the evangelists.

Ireland.—A fortnight's series of evangelistic services has been held in the Methodist Church, Queen-street, Lurgan, by Mr. James Dixon; similar services have boen held at Ballinlough, diocese of Tuam, by Rev. Canon Harley, of Cork.

Wood Green, N.—A week's Gospel mission has been held at the Baptist Chapel. The meetings (says a correspondent) have been characterised by a high spiritual tone. Several have declared themselves on the Lord's side, and others are inquiring the way Zionward.

Rev. W. A. Meaton has conducted a mission in Loughborough Park Chapel (Pastors, Rev. D. A. Herschell and J. A. Joyce.) Times of refreshing were enjoyed by the Christians, the young were blessed, and some decided to follow Jesus. The closing services were very large, and the spirit of hearing very manifest.

Rev. Geo. F. Owen, of Salcombe, has conducted special services for four nights in Torcross Congregational Church, South Devon. The attendances were good, souls were saved, and numbers were convicted of sin. The services were also blessed to the members of the church, who were greatly refreshed and stimulated.

Budleigh Salterton.—Wednesday, Dec. 4, terminated a successful four days' mission in this town, conducted by Mr. Roberts, of Plymouth, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A. The impression created was most marked. The association is of but recent formation in this town, but already it has made considerable progress, and more aggressive work is in contemplation.

Larbert, N.B.—During the last two weeks of November special meetings were held in the mission-hall, conducted by Mr. John Climie. The workers had the joy of seeing some entering into the possession and enjoyment of salvation, while believers were abundantly blessed. Mr. Climie is an evangelist of much power and tact in dealing with souls, and in making plain God's way of peace.

Batley.—Special services have been held at the Gospel Hall, Mount Pleasant, by Mr. Joseph Clarke, with great success. Noon-day meetings were held in many of the factories under gracious influences. A free tea was given to 120 draymen and cabmen, Mr. Clarke afterwards preaching the Gospel to them. During the mission a goodly number have professed conversion. Backsliders have been restored, and believers refreshed and strengthened.

Dover.—Special evangelistic services have been lately held in the Salem Baptist Chapel, by Mr. and Mrs. Somerset Gardner, which have resulted in much blessing. Mr. Gardner gave an earnest address to men only on "Confession of Sin." Mrs. Gardner conducted services for women only in the Baptist Chapel and the Y.W.C.A. rooms, which were also well attended. Christians have been greatly stirred up, and many have believed unto salvation.

Parbold, Southport.—Some time since a good work was commenced in a cottage in this village. It extended and prospered under the fostering care of some earnest-minded friends belonging to several denominations. A beautiful little hall has now been erected, capable of holding 250 people, and this was lately opened by some meetings of a helpful character. The British Women's Temperance Association has rendered good help, and the temperance element is well kept to the front in connection with the Gospel preaching.

Elgin.—The evangelistic meetings recently noticed were continued last (the fourth) week. They were addressed by Mrs. Stewart, of Logie; Mr. Butland, of H.M.S. Brilliant; Mr. Gordon, evangelist; and Rev. Colin Nicol, United Presbyterian Church, Banchory. Several very interesting cases of spiritual decision took place, and a quiet spirit of inquiry exists. On Sabbath evening, to a large audience, Mrs. Stewart delivered a very powerful address. Meetings are continued this week for praise, and for the edification of young believers.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

On Friday week the quaint little Church of Longfield, Kent, was re-opened by the Bishop of Rochester, having been enlarged to nearly twice its original size, in order to meet the wants of the increasing population.

In connection with the re-opening, after restoration, of St. Mary-le-Strand Church, London, Rev. Walter Bradbury preached special sermons on Sunday week, and again a mission sermon with after-meeting on Wednesday night. On Tuesday and Thursday Archdeacon Richardson and Canon Money preached.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

A well-attended and very interesting series of Bible-readings was given last week in the Hall of the Y.M.C.A., Belfast, by Mr. John T. Dorland, Jun., of Canada.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. John McNeill's congregation at Regent-square are arranging for a united effort in January to reach non-church goers in the region surrounding the church.

The committee of the English Presbyterian Synod entrusted with the care of the young have resolved to institute an annual examination of Sunday-schools, to be held on the third Sunday in January, the subject to be the International Lessons of the last quarter of the preceding year. Certificates will be awarded to those who pass.

The congregation of Withington Presbyterian Church are taking steps to provide additional services in a school church, now in course of erection at Didsbury. The services will be under the pastorate of Rev. Benjamin Bell, the minister at Withington, assisted by Rev. Robert Mackintosh, Edinburgh. The new building will accommodate nearly 300 persons. Arrangements are being made for holding services in the Withington Town Hall every Sunday evening from the beginning of the year, until the new hall is ready for use.

METHODIST.

Active preparations are being made in Leeds in view of a great evangelistic mission to be held there from January 19 to 30. The entire town is posted with immense bills announcing the mission, which is to be carried on at eighteen or twenty centres. Revs. T. Cook, T. Waugh, J. G. Mantle, and other ministers are to take part in the services.

In connection with Stepney Chapel (Methodist New Connexion), Hull, a special "Working Men's Mission" is carried on. At the first meeting only four adults attended. There is now a large attendance, and there have been many inquirers after salvation. Meetings are held from eight to nine p.m. on Sundays, with occasional services in the open air.

Rev. Alexander McAulay, an ex-President of the Wesleyan Conference, contemplates immediately after Christmas starting upon an extended evangelistic tour in South Africa. Blessed with ample financial resources, and notwithstanding his somewhat advanced age, he proposes to devote himself to spiritual work in Southern Africa, during the next three years, such as has engaged his attention with marked success in the West Indies during the past three years.

BAPTIST.

The jubilee has lately been celebrated of Borough-road Chapel, Southwark (Rev. G. W. McCree, pastor), which was opened by the late Rev. James Sherman in November, 1839.

Rev. Greenwood Robinson, who for five years has been co-pastor with Dr. Clifford, of Westbourne Park Chapel, and in sole charge of the branch church in Praed-street, has accepted the pastorate of Bank-buildings Chapel, Weymouth.

Rev. G. D. Evans has resigned the pastorate of the Old King-street Baptist Chapel, Bristol. Mr. Evans has recognised that owing to the migration of many of the members to the suburbs of the city, his church was losing strength; and he suggested that either the premises should be sold, and the church removed to a growing suburb, or that the chapel should be made the centre of denominational evangelistic work. After the end of the year, Mr. Evans will be open to supply vacant pulpits.

Since Rev. T. J. Hazzard undertook the pastorate of Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, E., in March last, the congregations have more than doubled, twenty-four have been added to the Church, and conversions have been reported almost every week. A band of young men are just forming into line for service. From 300 to 400 "drift" children are being gathered into the chapel every week for a bright hour of song and speech. Gospel temperance effort is being put forth with encouraging results.

A conference of the Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association was recently held at Brighton-grove College, Rusholme, Manchester, on the subject of "Our Work as Teachers." Rev. S. W. Bowser read a paper, in which he said that to teach well they must prepare carefully, and to teach much they must first learn much. Professor Marshall, of Brighton-grove College, thought expository teaching had unquestionably got a bad name, but it was very desirable that their congregations should know more about the Bible. If ministers did their duty to their people such works as "Robert Elsmere" need not alarm any young man who had been properly trained.

Rev. Wm. Bell, of the Bellasis-road Church, Bombay, has resigned his pastorate owing to failing health, and is returning to England.

A series of "Pleasant Sunday Afternoons" has been conducted by Rev. G. H. Heynes, pastor of Claremont Chapel, in the Temperance Hall, Bolton, the congregations, which were largely composed of the working-class, increasing from 800 to 3000. The subjects were "Bleaching," "Jerry-building," "Shoddy," &c., the speaker deducing, from familiar subjects, the lessons of duty to God and to fellowmen. At each service there were sacred solos, hymns, and Scripture reading.

SALVATION ARMY.

During a month's special mission at the Brighton Congress Hall many have gone to the penitent form.

Gujarat (India) Division has now twenty stations, fourteen of which are superintended by native workers.

A Buddhist priest recently walked twenty-eight miles to a Salvation Army meeting at Kandy, Ceylon, says The Indian War Cry, and there found salvation.

The effort to secure 100,000 conversions during the present winter is being actively taken up throughout the country, and many stations report encouraging success.

The week of self-denial and prayer observed by the members and friends of the Salvation Army in October has brought into headquarters about £20,000 which is somewhat in advance of the amount raised by the same means last year.

Nine years since there was no organised Salvation Army work in Australia. Now there are nearly one thousand officers wholly engaged, with over 300 established corps, and 450 outposts, besides eight rescue homes, and five prison-gate brigades.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. F. B. Tinling purposes closing his pastorate at East Finchley at the end of this month.

In the schools connected with the Old Meeting, Uxbridge (Rev. R. Sewell, pastor), there has been a remarkable religious awakening among the senior scholars of both sexes.

Greenbank Chapel, Hinton-road, Lower Easton, Bristol, a structure capable of seating 200 persons, the result of a movement on the part of a number of working men, by whom a large portion of the building work was gratuitously performed, was opened last week with a service, conducted by Rev. Arnold Thomas.

A meeting of the Northern District of the London Congregational Union was held on Tuesday week at Offord-road Chapel, Islington, to consider the advisability of a general visitation of the churches with a view to the introduction of new forms and methods in the conduct of the services. A paper by Rev. G. Thompson suggested sweeping changes, including the abolition of pews, replacing them by movable seats, the abolition of the pulpit, substituting a platform, and the abolition of the organ, substituting a musical band. A discussion followed, the general feeling being in favour of change.

Last week the third anniversary of Rev. Dr. Charles Leach's ministry at Queen's-park, Harrow-road, was commemorated by the laying of seven memorial-stones of the new church now being erected in place of the present temporary structure adjoining the hall, in which the schools and general work of the congregation are being carried on. The report of the past year's work showed that the schools have nearly 700 scholars and 50 teachers; 20 societies carry on the church's work, and the congregation raised in all last year some £2072. Dr. Leach stated that in the three years 400 had passed through the church, 95 during last year.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Soldiers' Home is about to be erected at Queenstown through the instrumentality of Rev. Canon Daunt.

The Banbridge Y.M.C.A. has taken a new departure in establishing a series of "Talks" to working men on Saturday nights.

A Young Women's Mutual Help Circle has been formed at Waterford, as the result of a most successful three weeks' series of Gospel services held in the Methodist Church in that city by Mrs. Caldwell.

A most interesting conference for the promotion of spiritual religion was held last week in Mill-row Presbyterian Church, Antrim, and a similar Convention was held in the recently erected Methodist Church, Drimoleague, co. Cork.

On Sunday last the death occurred at Ballynahinch, county Down, in his eighty-fourth year, of Rev. David Edgar, one of the oldest ministers of the Irish Presbyterian General Assembly. A little over fifty years ago Mr. Edgar was ordained successor to his father at Ballynahinch, where he continued to labour until his death. Mrs. Edgar pre-deceased her husband by a few days.

The annual meeting of the Belfast Town Mission was held last week. The report showed that a large number of evangelistic services and open-air meetings had been held during the year, besides over 700 visits to men on board the different ships, and nearly 47,000 visits to families. About 130 persons had been led to unite themselves with various churches. Intemperance is a great obstacle to the success of the Mission.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

The nurses and assistants of the Glasgow Sick Nursing Association last year paid 60,000 visits to the sick poor of the city.

A stirring week of evangelistic meetings has been held in Falkirk Congregational Church. Rev. David Robb, of Leith, acted as evangelist, and had increased audiences every evening.

Professor Thomas Smith, of New College, Edinburgh, will shortly attain his jubilee. Dr. Smith was formerly a missionary in India, and for some time laboured in association with Dr. Duff.

At the noonday meeting held on Monday in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, encouraging reports of the energetic evangelistic work carried on in connection with Cowcaddens Free Church were given.

Friday mid-day meetings for business men and women are to be held in St. John's Wesleyan Church, Glasgow, during December and January, to be conducted by Professor Bruce, Dr. Marshall Lang, and other leading ministers.

At the celebration of the semi-jubilee of Rev. James Wells, of Pollokshields, Glasgow, Dr. J. H. Wilson declared that Mr. Wells had not only built churches and organised congregations, but he had been a soul winner from the beginning.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

The Ven. John Jones, incumbent of Christ Church, Waterloo, Liverpool, and late Archdeacon of Liverpool.—Rev. Wm. Johnson, for many years rector of Clenore, co. Cork.—Rev. Elias James, of Pentwyn, Treorky, minister of the English Congregational Church at Tylor's Town, Pontypridd.—Rev. Robt. Watts, Presbyterian minister of Kilmacrennan, co. Donegal, and son of Rev. Professor Watts, D.D., of the Assembly's College, Belfast.—Miss Florence Leonard, daughter of Mr. George H. Leonard, J.P., of Clifton, who left a home of refinement and comfort at Bristol last year to devote herself, at her own expense, to itinerating evangelistic work in the villages around Ludhiana, Punjaub, in connection with the Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East.—Rev. Thos. Jenkins, minister of Penuel Baptist Church, Pentyrch, near Cardiff.—Rev. F. H. Thomas, incumbent of Kilfiithmone, near Templemore, Ireland.—Rev. E. S. Shields, Primitive Methodist minister of Kirby Cross.—Mr. J. B. Nicholas, an active worker connected with the Methodist Free Church at Breage, Cornwall.—Mr. William Thompson, a well-known local preacher of the Methodist New Connexion at Hucknall, Notts.

Notices.

A FRIEND.—The memorial notice by Miss Marsh of the late Marchioness of Ailsa can be had from Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co., 9, Paternoster-row, London, price 3d.

ROUVILLE.—For such a purpose we should advise a study of the Gospels rather than the perusal of an explanatory book, which must more or less reflect the judgment of another.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Rev. A. E. Sidford, Grea Chesterford, Essex (tracts in French); H. Hunt, Swanton Abbot, Norwich; Mrs. Mason, 74, Pimlico-road, S.W.; Miss E. Welsh, 110, Bridge-road West, Battersea, S.W.; Captain Clayton (Church Army), 2, Graig-street, Aberdare; J. Horsbrough, 8, Abingdon-road, Somers-road, Southsea, Portsmouth; A. M. Scantlebury, Brook House, Old Village, Cadoxton, near Cardiff; C. Norcliffe, 45, Commercial-street, Skipton, Yorkshire; H. Ellis, 25, Burgess-street, St. Paul's-road, Bow; Rev. J. Haythornthwaite, 64, Reble-road, Bootle, Liverpool; J. Norris, 96, Grafton-street, Mile End-road, E.; J. Rimmer, 74, Bentinck-street, Birkenhead; A. Holness, Jun., Glen Allen, Friern-road, E. Dulwich, S.E.; G. Ashby, 65, Lewisham-road, S.E.

School for the Blind, Peking.—Miss C. F. Gordon Cumming writes that the growth of this work is necessarily slow. The interest of the small capital raised barely yields £150 per annum, which only suffices to pay part of Mr. Murray's salary, and the working expenses of the school, which at present contains fifteen men and boys. Mr. Murray strongly represented the necessity of securing the adjoining property, in order to enable him to open a school for girls (which must be quite separate from that for boys.) The committee have advanced the requisite sum, i.e., £617 for the property as it stands, and some further outlay in order to adapt it to its new purpose. Miss Gordon Cumming says that although for the last year she has pleaded in season and out of season for £2000 to start this Female School for the Blind, and secure the salary of a resident matron (to say nothing of the food and clothing of the indigent scholars), she has succeeded in collecting only £50, and the recent receipts by the treasurer have been very trifling. The treasurers' address is Messrs. Honeyman and Drummond, Chartered Accountants, 58, Bath-street, Glasgow.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible and Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, DEC. 15.—2 Kings XX.

Hezekiah's sickness (1—7).—It was the year in which Sennacherib was besieging Jerusalem, hence "I will defend their city" (6). Accumulated troubles present a platform for accumulated deliverance. We may understand from the prophet's announcement that the natural result of the disease would have been death. But an arrest was put on the ordinary course of things by the miraculous interposition of God, in answer to prayer. This turning the face to the wall was like Ahab (1 Kings xxi. 4), and yet how different. That in a pet, this in prayer. When we cannot be as private as we would wish, let us not discontinue our devotions, but be as private as we can. Hezekiah may have quoted the promise made to David (1 Kings viii. 25), and longed for a respite, partly because life and immortality were not brought to light, and partly because he may have desired to finish his reforms. God always sees our tears and hears our prayers, though He does not always answer as promptly and satisfactorily to our poor sense. The figs were, perhaps, rather the means of stimulating faith than the cause of cure.

The sign (8—11).—The dial was probably a series of steps on which an upright pole cast a shadow, the hours being marked by the coincidence of the shadow with the edge of the steps. It appears that there was a partial eclipse of the sun in Jerusalem at this time, on January 11, B.C. 680, but it is not likely that this would account for this remarkable phenomenon, which was doubtless due to some forth-putting of Divine power which we cannot understand. But the shadow might be affected, without any necessary interference with the movements of the planetary system.

The penalty of ostentation (12—21).—What a lost opportunity not to show these men that the sun was, after all, but a servant in the hand of Israel's God! We are all tempted to the sin of display, showing off our possessions as ours, instead of acknowledging that they are given us of God. If you are fond of Babylon, you will fall by Babylon. We ought to reckon ourselves dead to the flatteries of men, and alive only to those eternal things which outlive the material, which thieves cannot steal, nor moth corrupt. Oh, to be able to acquiesce in all the Divine appointments! Good is the word of the Lord.

MONDAY, DEC. 16.—2 Kings XXI.

Manasseh's sins (1—9).—A pious father cursed with a wicked son. Not the last time, alas! And it is the more wonderful, as he was born after the marvellous deliverances in the State, as well as in the royal home. He carried his sacrilege into the precincts of the holy Temple, and introduced the very worst forms of idolatry. The prophets Hosea, Joel, Nahum, Habakkuk, and Isaiah, lived during this reign; and it is recorded by tradition that the last of these was sawn asunder (Heb. xi. 37). Very much innocent blood (16).

The predicted doom (10—16).—The line and plummet were used to mark off those, in a long line of captives, who were reserved for life or condemned to death. The wiping of the dish is very expressive. The people abetted their king in what he did, and they were therefore to share his fate. The blood of innocents aggravated their case. The Lord was about to leave his people to suffer the results of their sins, that they might learn by contrast what an awful thing it was to forfeit his protecting care (Hosea v. 14, 15).

Manasseh's death (17, 18).—Compare 2 Chron. xxxiii., where we hear the story of Manasseh's repentance and acceptance with God. Surely, if he were forgiven and saved, none need despair. It was in his affliction that he sought the Lord. This is a blessed result of sorrow.

Amon's reign was short and inglorious (19—26). He was not affected by his father's repentance, but followed the footsteps of his idolatry and crime (20, 21), till the people of the land would tolerate him no more. Parents may adopt for themselves, in maturer life, a holier and better course, but they can never eradicate the evil influences exerted on their children.

TUESDAY, DEC. 17.—2 Kings XXII.

Josiah's good reign (1, 2).—Only eight on his accession to the throne, he seems from the first to have chosen the paths of goodness, but in his sixteenth year, while he was still young, he began to seek God yet more earnestly, and four years after the religious life within him prompted him to begin a great work of reform (2 Chron. xxxiv. 2, 3).

The repair of the Temple (3—7).—Other reforms had been probably effected throughout the land, but it was not till his eighteenth year that this great work actually began. The money seems to have been contributed voluntarily, but there was a beautiful piety in the workmen which made them deal faithfully. There is no doubt that real religion makes better masters and servants; hence so many find it worth their while to feign it.

The discovery of the Book of the Law (8—14).—This was the Temple copy, laid beside the ark in the most holy place (Deut. xxxi. 25, 26). Some say that it had been hidden by some faithful priest during the ungodly reigns of Manasseh and Amon. It is thought that the passage read to the king was Deut. xxviii., xxix., xxx. If the king had heard them before, which to many appears likely, the word came with new directness and force; but it is not improbable that the whole was totally new to him. Such had been the success of the effort to exterminate pure religion. What a picture this scene would make! The reading of Scripture to king and court, amid every sign of terror at the impending judgments which it threatened.

The mission to Huldah.—Ahikam was a friend of Jeremiah (Jer. xxvi. 24). Achbor, or Abdon, a leading courtier. Zephaniah may have been too young; Jeremiah at Anathoth. So, as the need was urgent, they went at once to Huldah, the widow of Shallum, well known for her prophetic gifts. The college was the name, not for a school, but for a particular quarter of the city. The decree had gone forth as against Sodom, but, as in the case of Lot, so here, the people of God are delivered.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 18.—2 Kings XXIII.

The Law is read (1—3).—What he had found so blessed to his own soul he desired to share with others. It must have been a marvellous congregation for a Bible-reading. Perhaps people would benefit from a little more public reading of the Scriptures. Pass on the holy word of God!

Idolatry destroyed (4—20).—The brook Kedron runs along the east and south of the city, dry in summer, but after heavy rains a torrent bed. There the impurities of Temple and city were emptied. The grove of ver. 6 was the mystic tree. Some of the Levitical priests, who had fallen into the habit of officiating in high places, were degraded from their office, though still maintained from the Temple revenues. Tophet, so called from toph, a drum, used to drown the cries of terrified children made to pass through the fire at this place. The filth of the city was collected here and burned; hence the allusion of Mark ix. 44. He was not satisfied with removing every vestige of idolatry from his own dominions, but made a tour of the land once inhabited by the ten tribes, and especially destroyed the ancient altar at Bethel, as had been predicted 326 years before his birth (1 Kings xiii. 2). From that time the desolation foretold by Hosea and Amos has never been disturbed, and Bethel, the house of God, has literally become Bethaven, the house of nought.

The passover observed (21—28).—When the old leaven was cleared away, they could keep the feast. There came to it, not only his own subjects, but many of the remnant people of the ten tribes (2 Chron. xxxv. 1—19). But though there was this outward reform, yet the hearts of the people were not right with God, as appears from the prophets; and, because of this, the Divine decree wrought itself out.

Josiah's death, and afterwards (28—37).—These events are more fully related in 2 Chron. xxxv. 20). The defeat of Josiah at Megiddo is confirmed by Herodotus, and by sculptures on Pharaoh's tomb. Jehoahaz, a younger son, was taken prisoner by Pharaoh, carried to Egypt, where he died (Jer. xxii. 10—12). Jehoiakim, notwithstanding the pressure which lay on him, did evil, and hastened his ruin.

THURSDAY, DEC. 19.—2 Kings XXIV.

Nebuchadnezzar now first appears on the scene. This was in the first year of his reign (Jer. xxv. 1). The Chaldees were evidently the flower of his kingdom (Dan. ii). "He slept with his fathers" simply means he died, for this king was not honoured with the rites of sepulture (Jer. xxxvi. 30). The very brief reign of his son, which lasted only three months, during which he served the king of Babylon, is scarcely to be taken into account, and therefore is not inconsistent with the prediction quoted above. The battle of Carchemish, referred to in 7, was one of the decisive battles of the world (see Jer. xlvi. 2).

Captivity (8—17).—The royal family surrendered, and were carried into exile, according to Jeremiah's prediction (Jer. xxii. 24, 25), and there Jehoiachin lingered for thirty-seven years (xxv. 27). The sacred vessels also were taken, though the false prophets flattered the people they would be returned (Jer. xxvii. 16; Dan. v. 3). In this captivity, also, Ezekiel and Mordecai were taken (Ezek. i. 1, 2; Esther ii. 6). It is very necessary to study Jeremiah's prophecies as illustrating this briefer history.

The last of the kings.—The name assigned him by Nebuchadnezzar meant God's Justice. But his heart was reckless and impenitent. Led on by ambassadors from neighbouring states (Jer. xvii. 3; xxviii. 1), he was induced to join a league against Babylon, in the teeth of Jeremiah's remonstrances, who wept tears of blood over the infatuation of his countrymen; but Zedekiah seemed blinded to all warning lights as to truth and honour (Ezek. xvii. 13).

FRIDAY, DEC. 20.—2 Kings XXV.

Jerusalem again besieged (1—3).—Angered by this last perfidious revolt, the King of Babylon resolved to put an end to the separate existence of the kingdom. This invasion was third and last. The siege lasted one year and a half, owing to the strength of the fortifications. The inhabitants were reduced to the most dreadful extremities by hunger, and perpetrated the most awful atrocities (Lam. ii. 20—22; iv. 3). The worst features of ancient threatening were fulfilled (Lev. xxvi. 29; Deut. xxviii. 53—57). Jeremiah earnestly persuaded the king to surrender; but his heart was hardened to his destruction (Jer. xxxviii. 17).

The final scenes (4—21).—Two prophecies, apparently contradictory, were fulfilled (Jer. xxxii. 5; Ezek. xii. 13). The Temple was burnt after 420 years of varying fortunes. Only 832 persons (Jer. lii. 29) were now carried into captivity, probably because so many had perished. The severity of their doom was in proportion to the height of their privilege, and the greatness of the love which they might have enjoyed (Amos iii. 2).

The remnant (22, &c.).—The poorest only were left, under Gedaliah, Jeremiah's friend (Jer. xxvi. 24; xl., xli.) His murder of Ishmael, who was jealous of him, was the last drop of anguish in the prophet's cup. In spite of his earnest protestations, the people deserted their own land, and settled in Egypt (Jer. xliv. 1). Thus ended the kingdom of Judah, and thereafter the Jews became a scattered people, though destined to pass through two more extreme agonies, the one of which befell them under Titus, the last awaits them still.

SATURDAY, DEC. 21.—1 Chron. I.

The two books of Chronicles are in the Hebrew reckoned as one, which is called "words of the day"—or journals. Ezra is supposed to have compiled the books after the captivity, though in some cases the language of the original records is retained. Their contents repeat much that was contained in previous books, and add many interesting particulars beside. The genealogies, however uninteresting to some, are important as showing Christ's descent from Abraham.

The genealogies in this and subsequent chapters give us the line of David. Others, not included in his line, are mentioned, but only in order to make the line clear down to him.

Ver. 1—27 give the connection between Adam, the father of all men, and Abraham, the father of the faithful. Naturally, we are all the seed of Adam, but only through the exercise of faith do we become the seed of Abraham (Gal. iii. 9). Compare 1—4 and 24—27 with Luke iii. 34—38, where the evangelist gives the same genealogy, but in the reverse order. The sons of Japheth, who settled in the western parts of the world (5—7), and the sons of Ham, who moved southward (8—16), are both briefly mentioned. The line of Ham included Nimrod and Mizraim, from whom descended the Egyptians; and Canaan, from whom the Canaanites.

Ver. 29—54 give the posterity of Abraham, first through Ishmael (29—31); then from Keturah (32, 33); and then through Esau (35—54). These are not part of the royal line; that is taken up again in the following chapter. They are introduced here because they show how fully God fulfilled his promise to make Abraham "the father of many nations."

Solemn thoughts crowd upon the mind while reading these lists of names. They have lived their life, and passed into eternity. They can never retrace their steps, nor have a second attempt to live their life to a nobler purpose. We are in the same stream which ever flows into the ocean of eternity. Make use of the present, for it is fast passing away.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, December 22.

CLOSE OF SOLOMON'S REIGN.—1 KINGS xi. 26—43.

GOLDEN TEXT: ECCLES. xii. 13.

THE last lesson faithfully recorded Solomon's sin; this as faithfully declares his punishment. His example warns us that none can sin without suffering in consequence of it. It is wise to forego the present brief pleasure of sin, rather than endure the punishment to which it surely leads.

God found ready instruments for chastising his servant. Hadad (14), and Rezon (23)—whether they knew it or not—were doing God's work when they became adversaries to Solomon. "The wicked" are "his sword" (Ps. xvii. 13); and He uses them according to his will.

The adversary whom Solomon had most reason to fear was Jeroboam (26). This is the first mention of the man who afterwards became so notoriously wicked. He was an Ephrathite—or (see Revised Version) an Ephraimite—belonging to Zereda, a town of Ephraim. Jeroboam was one of Solomon's servants (26), and was employed by him in building Millo (27), probably a specially important, and well-fortified portion of the city walls; and in "repairing the breaches." The breach is generally referred to the ravine which separated Zion and Moriah, and which Solomon now built up. In this service, Jeroboam displayed such ability and industry that Solomon entrusted him with an important and responsible charge (28). He was made superintendent of the house of Joseph, which included his own tribe—Ephraim. This was an unfortunate appointment for Solomon. It is hardly likely that the Ephraimites would, without murmuring, be employed as forced labourers on the fortifications of Jerusalem. Their murmurings would find a ready listener in Jeroboam, and help to prepare the way for his rebellion.

So far, there is nothing in Jeroboam that gives indication of the sinful career which followed. He possesses qualities which are calculated to make him a prominent man, but whether for good or evil does not yet appear. His ambition (37) is the only dangerous feature in him.

The prophecy of Ahijah (29–39).—The prophet belonged to the same tribe as Jeroboam, for Shiloh was in Ephraim. The new garment, rent into ten pieces, was a sign such as Old Testament prophets frequently adopted (1 Sam. xv. 27). In this case it gave special emphasis to the message. For Jeroboam, this prophecy contained, not only an announcement which his ambition very readily welcomed, but instructive lessons to guide him in ruling over Israel. (1) He was reminded that God disposed of kingdoms. As the prophet rent the garment, so would God rend the kingdom from Solomon. He exalts and abases whom He will (Dan. ii. 20, 21). He learned (2) that God's action was not arbitrary. Obedience was the condition upon which God had promised to establish Solomon on the throne; but in this Solomon had miserably failed. His disobedience and idolatry were so great (33) that judgment was bound to follow. He also learned (3) that in wrath God remembered mercy. While Solomon suffered for his own sin, he obtained some measure of relief on account of David's obedience (32, 34, 36, 39). The two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, reserved for the seed of David, as strongly testified to God's reward of obedience, as the ten tribes given to Jeroboam witnessed against Solomon's sin. He was taught (4) the condition upon which he might look for success (37—38). For him, obedience would ensure prosperity. If he should prove disobedient and idolatrous after such a message, he is absolutely without excuse.

Had not Jeroboam a very promising commencement? With natural qualities calculated to make him great and useful; with a warning example before him in the sad downfall of Solomon; with a message from God Himself, calling him to obedience, and promising to make him a sure house—what more can he need to keep him right?

Solomon's death (40—43).—Perhaps Solomon heard of Ahijah's message to Jeroboam; or, possibly, Jeroboam, after receiving the message, began at once to rebel (26). In either case, Solomon does not appear in a favourable light in seeking to kill Jeroboam. It was an attempt to resist God. Like Saul and David, Solomon reigned forty years. He was hardly more than sixty years old when he died.

Whether Solomon ever repented and turned to God is not stated. Scripture simply records the fact of his death following his fall. They who believe he did repent may not make his repentance a reason for presumption.

Appeals.

WE continue to receive many appeals, a goodly proportion of which are called forth by the season of the year. We give the salient points, and refer our readers, for further particulars, to the persons named.

A special effort is being made to diminish the debt of £1500 upon the Gray's-yard Ragged Church and School, James-street, Oxford-street, W., and to raise £200 to provide free meals for the many casuals who congregate on Sundays to hear the Gospel. A special Christmas sale of works of art, needlework, clothing, &c., will be held from Monday to Saturday next week at 13, Duke-street, Manchester-square. To this address contributions may be sent to Miss Ada R. Habershon.

Miss C. M. Gough, of the Y.W.C.A. Home for restaurant and refreshment-room attendants, appeals for help towards enlarging the Home, which at present is very small. The premises can be obtained if the money is forthcoming. Address Miss C. M. Gough, 14, John-street, Bedford-row, W.C.

Rev. Philip Gast, minister of Spencer-place Chapel, Goswell-road, writes: "For over twenty-eight years, as funds have allowed, I have relieved the destitute and suffering poor of St. Lukes' and Clerkenwell, always irrespective of creed and party. At present a vast number of distressing cases are known to me. I shall be glad to receive clothing, blankets, and money at 12, Noel-street, Islington."

There are hundreds of impoverished families living around Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, E. Money towards a relief fund will be thankfully received by Rev. John Bain, Lindholme, Goulton-road, Clapton, N.E.

The Committee of the Indignent Blind Visiting Society appeal for means to give more than a thousand blind persons a Christmas dinner with their friends at home, and coals for the winter months. The need is extremely urgent. Secretary, Mr. W. C. Lester, 27, Red Lion-square, W.C.

In the various centres of the Union Hall Mission there are numbers of needy persons, to whom it would be a pleasure at this season of the year to render some help. Among young and old, there are many who need clothing. It is hoped, also, to give the poor in the lodging-houses a Christmas dinner. Address, Mr. R. Bilke, Abergeldie, Greenhill Park, Harlesden, N.W.

Funds are sadly wanted to enable the Field-lane Refuges and Ragged School to continue their work among the poor of London. The Committee are desirous of providing a dinner on Christmas Day for 700 of the homeless, and for about 600 poor deserving families in the neighbourhood. Address, Peregrine Platt, at the Homes, Vine-street, Clerkenwell-road, E.C.

"The dawn of severe winter is," writes Rev. J. W. Atkinson, "intensifying the sad suffering of thousands of the unemployed respectable poor in North-east London. Our methods again embrace the distribution of shilling food parcels, small sacks of coal and coke, bread tickets, &c. Indeed, we endeavour in every way to help the poor to help themselves." Mr. Atkinson's address is Claremont, Cawley-road, N.E.

Earnest appeal is made on behalf of Christian work and in aid of the poor resident in Paddington and Marylebone. The operations having for their centre John-street Chapel, John-street, Edgware-road, W., are well known. Communications to Mr. William T. Russell, 27, Cambridge-street, Edgware-road, W.

Marylebone Medical Mission is in much need of blankets and warm clothing for the destitute poor. Address, Dr. R. Chambers, 12, Bell-street, Edgware-road, N.W.

The North London Homes for Aged Christian Blind, Hanley-road, Crouch Hill, N., has now received their sixty-sixth inmate. There is accommodation for eighty, but the full number cannot be admitted for want of adequate funds. Urgent applications are continually being received, but have to be painfully refused. Rev. Henry Bright and Mrs. Bright are the honorary superintendents.

Craven Chapel, Foubert's-place, Regent-street, is in the midst of a dense population, many of whom are very poor. Contributions of old clothes, and money for soup, bread, coals, &c., will be thankfully received by the pastor, Rev. Arthur Hall, directed to the chapel.

Mrs. Adamson writes from Old Ford Vicarage, E.: "Last winter I supplied over 11,000 dinners, about one-third of them free, the others at nominal payment, to the children of this district. Our parish contains 11,000 poor, most of whom crowd together in small tenements. Beyond the grants kindly made to my committee, I require a large sum to meet the expenses of coals, cooking utensils, provisions, &c., up to April next."

The Hon. Secretary of the Christian Blind Relief Society is anxious to send a gift of 5s. to 1000 of the blind poor of the Metropolis and the provinces, with whom he has been brought into contact in his official capacity. He promises that, if kind friends provide him with the necessary funds, the gifts shall only go to those whose private income does not reach 1s. per day. Letters should be addressed to Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, St. Stephen's Vicarage, North Bow, E.

The Riverside Mission, Paradise-street, Rotherhithe, S.E., asks for help towards the annual Christmas dinner to the destitute poor. All assistance will be acknowledged by Rev. B. Brigg, 146, Abbey-street, Bermondsey.

The friends of the West Marylebone Mission, St. James's Hall, George-street, Lisson Grove, N.W., desire to provide, during Christmas week, several feasts, to which they will call "the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind." Help will be gratefully received by Mr. James Sprunt, Superintendent.

The Christmas dinner fund of the Borough-road Baptist Chapel, S.E., which is applied towards helping the deserving poor, requires replenishment at the present time. The good work of Rev. G. W. M'Cree, the pastor, is acknowledged far and wide. His address is 12, Ampton-street, W.C.

The weekly dinner for the suffering and needy has again been started in connection with the York-road Congregational Church, Lambeth. Last year 6000 persons, all well known to the district missionaries and visitors, participated. Help may be sent to Rev. Bevill Allen, addressed to the church.

In connection with the work at Christchurch, St. Giles, blankets and clothing, food and money, are sadly wanted. A number of old people and widows require winter provision, and about one hundred poor children need clothing. Help will be thankfully received by Rev. S. A. Griffiths, Endell-street, W.C.

Mr. John Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N., writes: "We are giving coals and bread, and relieving the sick and distressed at the Maryland Point Mission, Stratford. Help is much needed."

INQUIRER'S COLUMN.

ABEL'S SACRIFICE.

SIR,—Is there any ground for the belief that Cain and Abel were commanded to bring a specified offering to God? As I understand it, whatever Abel had brought, if he had offered it in the manner he actually did—that is, in faith—it would have been accepted. C. S.

Nine Elms.

The essence of sacrifice is an acknowledgment of the forfeiture of man's life by sin. Abel's offering answered to this; Cain's did not. It was through Abel's "more excellent" sacrifice, which was prompted and characterised by "faith," that "testimony was borne to him that he was righteous" (Heb. xi. 4). Of Cain, on the other hand, we read that "his works were evil" (1 John iii. 12). Perversity in relation to God's laws and envy of the godly are shown in the Epistle of Jude to constitute "the way of Cain."

A GOOD MAN'S PARTING WORD.

WHEN Lord Shaftesbury, pronounced by the London Times to be "the foremost philanthropist of this generation," lay at the point of death, his parting word to his friend Mr. Weylland of the London City Mission, was about distributing several thousand copies of the Lecture on the Inspiration of the Bible, which he had pronounced "one of the most important essays of modern times."

The good old nobleman rests from his labours, but the work needs doing just as much now as ever.

A HALF MILLION copies are now being distributed throughout Great Britain; 50,000 being cared for by the London City Mission alone.

I turn now from Great Britain to All Heathen Lands, and, esp cially, TO THE EAST INDIES.

In a circular signed by Lord Shaftesbury and others, dated June, 1883, were these words:—

"The literature of India itself is very impure; and shoals of atheistic and infidel publications are every year being sent to India from England. It is the bounden duty of Christian men to counteract this evil by aiding to create a healthy Christian literature."

I will try to do my part in this direction. If the Christian Public will subscribe for One Million Copies of The Inspiration of the Bible before June, 1890, at the low rate of £2 10s. per 1,000, I myself will FREELY GIVE A HALF MILLION additional of my 32-page Christian evidence tracts assor ed. A translation is being made into Tamil. Letters said to be in Chinese and various Oriental languages, lie on my desk. I am personally unable to read them, but am told that there are multitudes who can, towards whom my heart goes out.

In order that the humblest of the Lord's stewards may not be deterred from helping by expense, my publishers will execute even a shilling order for Heathen Lands at the thousand rate. And, to every two shillings received by them for this purpose before June 1, 1890, I, myself, will add a free gift of one shilling's worth of "Inspiration" and other needed tracts on Christian evidences, reckoned at the same thousand rate. Let even the children help to lift this weight of nearly 40 tons of tracts against Infidelity, over all seas. A common fund will be formed of all subscriptions. As soon as enough to print one hundred thousand books accumulates, the printers will be set at work. The task of properly distributing to the various missionaries will be entrusted solely to one devoted Christian worker, a Specialist in this field of Christian evidences, a man better fitted to do it rightly than any other I can name, either in Great Britain or America.

Meanwhile, let Missionaries from all parts correspond with me, stating the needs and the facts as to the spread of atheistic literature in their vicinity. Also give full information as to friendly ship-masters touching at London or English ports, who would take out parcels freely, or relieve us of at least a portion of the heavy expenses of carriage to distant countries. Especially thankful would I be for the addresses of English Reading Heathen whom I may be able to reach through my "Postal and Tract Mission." Any suggestions will be welc med.

All remittances for this purpose should be distinctly marked "Christian Evidences for the Heathen," and addressed as below. On a small scale, amounting now to a few tons, some special literature has been sent out to missionaries all over the world, by friendly sea captains and by post, for twenty years past. But no longer can Christians afford to do this business on so small a basis. With the hel) of God and your orders I propose to do this work, in the near future, by the ton, and not merely by the pennyweight. I ask the prayers of all Christians for a special blessing on this East Indian work, far too heavy for one man, or a dozen men, to accomplish unaided.

"The undersigned, being personally acquainted with the Anti-Infidel publications of Mr. H. L. Hastings, do most heartily commend his work to the confidence, encouragement, and support of all Christians and Philanthropists":—

MR. CHARLES INGLIS.

AT the noon prayer-meeting, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, on Monday, Mr. Charles Inglis gave some account of his recent visit to the American continent. His heart was overflowing with praise to God for blessing vouchsafed upon his labours in the Gospel. Mr. Leonard Weaver, who accompanied him in much bodily weakness, is now almost restored to his wonted health.

Referring to his preaching efforts, Mr. Inglis said that many doors were opened, and, if he had been prepared to accept all invitations, he would have been fully occupied for twelve months to come. A specially interesting work was done in the prisons of New York and Toronto, criminals under sentence of death being among those who listened with marked attention to the Gospel. The audience in the former city numbered about 300; in the latter it was also very large, and included some forty who professed to pass from death to life.

While there is this liberty in gaol administration in America, there is also the most complete discipline. In one of the prisons in which he preached, where there were about thirteen hundred souls, sixty of them incarcerated for life, some four hundred held up their hands to be prayed for. Mr. Inglis hoped that the English prisons might soon be similarly open to evangelistic endeavour. He added that wherever he went he found the people willing to listen to the simple Gospel. There is, of course, great opposition across the water, as well as elsewhere, but, nevertheless, God is drawing to Himself men from all classes of society, and there are many devoted labourers in his cause.

Personalia.

Dr. Colin Valentine, of Agra, who has been home on furlough on account of the state of his health, sails from London next week on his return to the important work in India of training native medical missionaries to which he has consecrated his life. His health has improved considerably during his furlough.

Mr. William Peck Smith, formerly engaged in Y.M.C.A. work in London, during recent years occupied in general Christian labour in America, is about to visit England. Recent meetings in connection with the Florence All-night Mission, New York, have been very fruitful. Mr. Smith brings letters of introduction from Drs. Talmage and Cuyler, and Mr. I. D. Sankey. He will be glad to hear of openings for work. Letters may be addressed to him at Exeter Hall, Strand.

Mr. Spurgeon, referring to his departure for the South of France, says: We are not going to our quiet retreat because of ill-health, but in the nope of refreshment for that weariness of mind which is inevitable with such a charge as we have to bear. Many men have been taken away by death, or have been laid aside by failure of brain, through not taking rest. It is an economy of time to take off the collar for a little. Our vacation is mainly spent in gathering new subjects for another spell of sermonising, and when we have been well enough to use it in that way, it has enabled us to keep on preaching and printing through the rest of the year.

Mr. John Crerar, a wealthy citizen of Chicago, who died recently, leaving an estate of three and a half million dollars, has bequeathed the chief portion of it to various charities, including especially churches and orphan asylums. One large bequest is made by him for the establishment of a public library, respecting which he records in his will:—"I desire that the books and periodicals be selected with a view to create and sustain a Christian sentiment in the community, and that all nastiness and immorality be excluded. I do not mean by this that there shall not be anything but hymn-books and sermons, but I mean that dirty French novels and all sceptical trash and works of questionable healthiness of tone shall never be found in this library. I wish the atmosphere to be one of Christian refinement, and its aim and object the building up of character."

Rev. D. A. Herschell wishes to caution the public against certain Jews professing to be persecuted converts from the Continent, using his name, and claiming his relationship to secure pecuniary assistance. A man, giving the name of Wolf, has lately been doing this in Devonshire, and, as the same sort of thing is not a rare occurrence, Mr. Herschell wishes to state that he has no relatives likely to be in such a position.

DONATIONS RECEIVED BY MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT TO MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

WORK AMONGST MEN.

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced, and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Further and full particulars will be gladly given, and contributions will be gratefully received by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY, BEVAN, RANSOM & Co., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

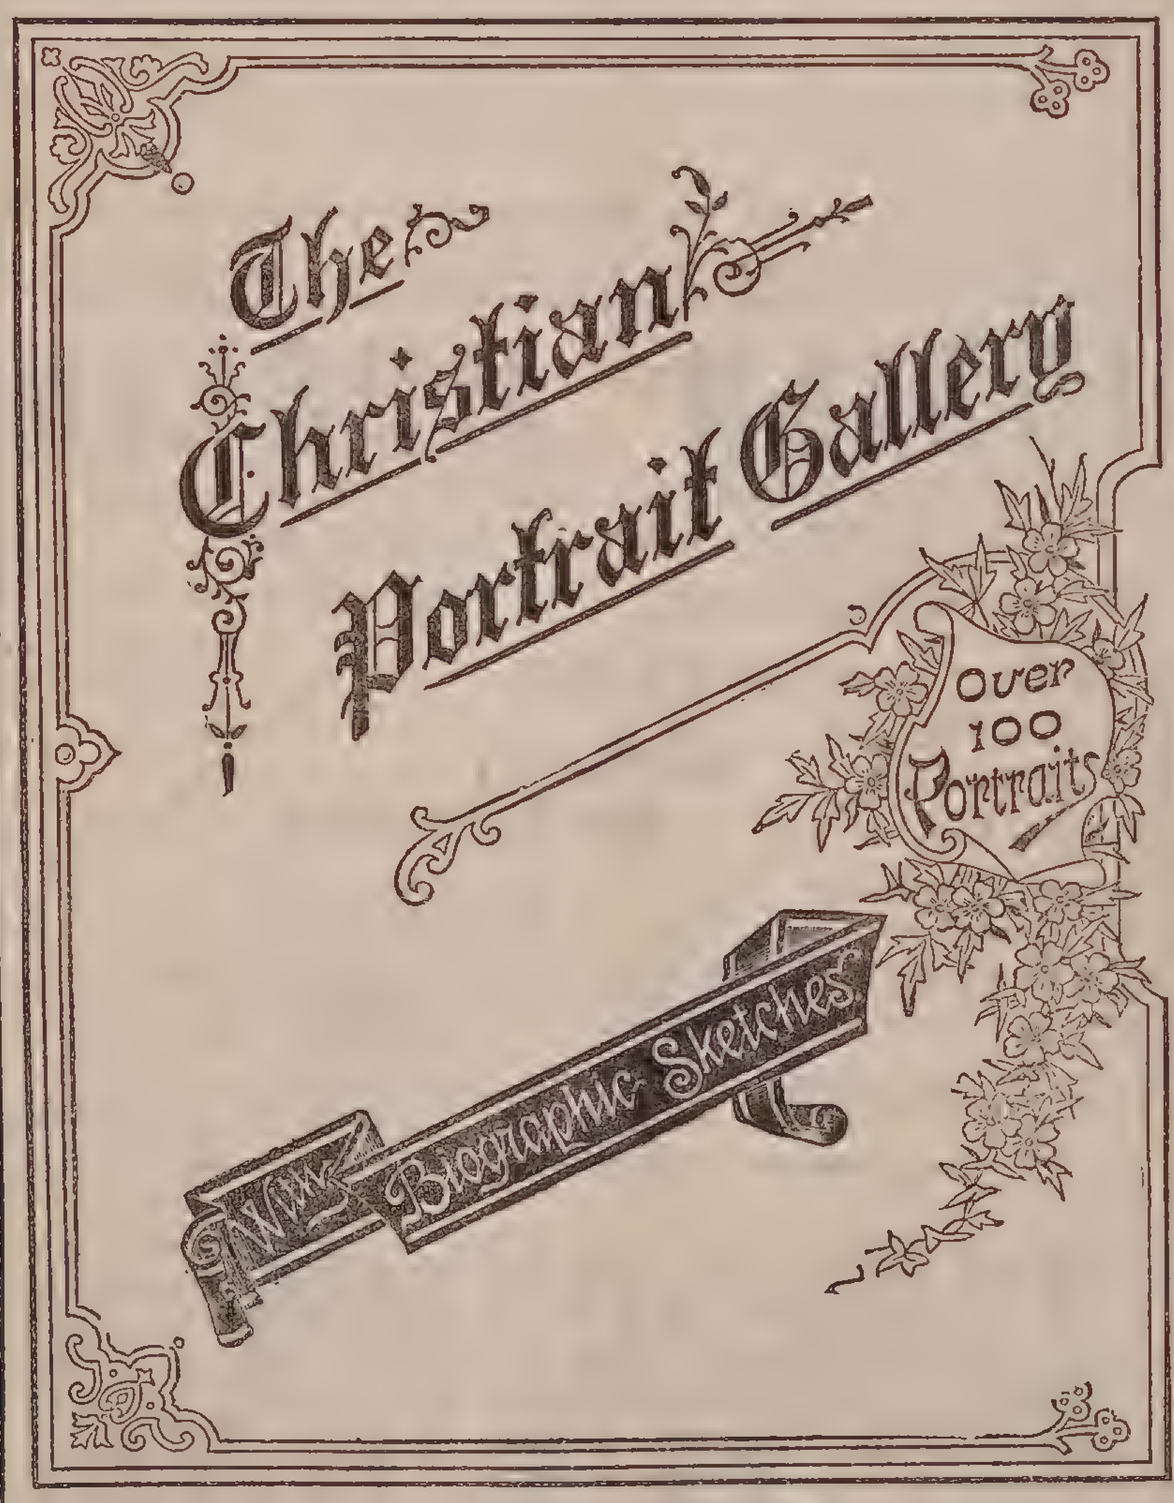
A MOST ATTRACTIVE AND ACCEPTABLE GIFT-BOOK FOR THE SEASON.



The Christian Portrait Gallery:

Over 400 pages of Letterpress, Demy Quarto, Attractively Bound, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott have just published a superb book. It is entitled The Christian Portrait Gallery, and contains portraits and biographical sketches of one hundred present-day Christian workers, a selection from those that have been appearing in THE CHRISTIAN during recent years. All sections of the Church are represented, and the foreign work as well as the home work. The whole get-up of the book is first-class, and it is full of matter that will be highly valued by all who account an enlarged sympathy with the work of Jesus Christ in the world as one of the chief joys of life."

Divine Life, November, 1889.

REDUCED FAC-SIMILE.

(Actual size of the Volume, 11 inches by 9 inches.)

"The portraits are well-engraved and well-printed, and the biographical sketches are brief but concise. The production of the volume in paper, print, binding, and general appearance is very satisfactory. It is, in truth, a handsome volnme, and would form a very attractive gift-book for those interested in such lives and work as are here set forth."—The Nonconformist, November 14, 1889.

"This handsomely-bound volume possesses peculiar value and interest for all who follow with prayer and sympathy the life and labours of these men and women whom God has honoured in our own times. It contains over one hundred admirable portraits and brief biographic sketches of Christian workers in all ranks of life, and in all departments of service, both at home and abroad. Nearly one-third of those whose personal histories are presented have already passed to their rest and reward; many others are aged veterans, who have already borne the burden and heat of day; while not a few are still in the front rank of devoted labour. All who can afford to add the volume to their library will find it pregnant with stimulation and encouragement to follow these examples as they have followed Christ."—Word and Work, November 22, 1889.

"A volume which will be welcomed in many a household is The Christian Portrait Gallery, consisting of over one hundred portraits and biographies of eminent preachers and missionaries. In respect of truthful portraiture nothing could be more desirable than the sketches here presented, many of the faces familiar to the public of to-day starting from the pages with the vividness of life. The subjects are drawn from a very extended tract of religious life, and a meed of praise is rendered equally to the popular preacher, the worker in the slums, the gleaner in the Indian mission field, and the South African evangelist."—Scottish Leader, October 24, 1889.

"A volume which many will be delighted to possess. It contains well-executed and life-like portraits of about a hundred of the best known Christian ministers and workers of the present day, with a short account of the life and work of each of them. It is a treasury of Christian biography, as well as a faithful record of earnest and successful Christian work, and in every respect a most interesting book. . . . All who can purchase the volume will be very pleased with it. It is beautifully printed and bound, a real drawing-room book."

Christian Progress, December, 1889.

"No more beautiful or more acceptable book has recently been issued from the press than The Christian Portrait Gallery. Whether one regards it merely as a work of art, or as helpful and stimulating literature, it alike gives the greatest satisfaction. There are over one hundred portraits of ministers and Christian men of all classes and creeds, and they are real likenesses, finished in the best style. And the letterpress is in every respect worthy of the portraiture work. Biographical literature is, in our judgment, the most helpful; it may not be the most interesting to many, but few will deny that it is to all the most inspiring and the most productive of all that is good, true, and noble. Even from the life of a vicious, degraded man we may learn many a lesson, and the power of a pure and noble life is ever felt; while, when this is put in even the most simple setting, it is as a precious jewel flashing its light abroad in the world. These sketches of men of God have not been produced in vain. Nothing could be more fit for a gift-book than this beautiful volume."

Christian Commonwealth, November 21, 1889.

"These are 'PEARLS' indeed. The gifted authoress has added a rare volume to her already large stock of books; and the reading public will thank her for this delightful work."
The Christian Treasury.

MARY LYON.

Recollections of a Noble Woman. By FIDELIA FISKE. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth elegant, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Among American educators 'Mary Lyon' occupies a first place. The book is a study for teachers: and still more for all who wish to exercise spiritual influence over others, consecrating their work as teachers to the noblest ends."—The Freeman.

SEVENTEENTH THOUSAND.

CHOICE SAYINGS.

A Collection of over 800 Striking and Profitable Comments on Great Truths. By ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. Tinted covers, 9d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, gilt edges, 2s.; Morocco, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"Here we have gold-dust: 'and the gold of that land is good.' We hardly know a man more noteworthy for abounding grace and deep piety than ROBERT C. CHAPMAN. This name has never been sounded abroad; but those who know him value him beyond expression. Some of these brief 'SAYINGS' contain whole sermons. Personally we expect to gather many discourses while studying this little book. A dew from heaven rests upon Mr. CHAPMAN'S expositions."—Sword and Trowel.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:

A Record of the Life of a beloved Sister. By FRANCES E. WILLARD. With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER, and a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER. With Three Portraits and View of Miss Willard's Birthplace. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.; Presentation Edition: Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s.

"A most interesting biography and memoir of a girl's life. Its details are charmingly written. A better, purer present to girls and young women cannot be found."—Ladies' Treasury.

P. P. BLISS:

His Life and Life Work. Edited by Major WHITTLE and Rev. W. GUEST. Containing also an Introduction by D. L. MOODY, and Memorial Notice by IRA D. SANKEY. Cloth extra, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d. With Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. BLISS and their TWO YOUNG CHILDREN.

"An interesting sketch of the life and work of Mr. BLISS, with whose music, lovers of sacred song are well acquainted."—Beverley Weekly Reporter.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK.

By Rev. W. GUEST, Author of "Stephen Grellet," &c. A descriptive account of the remarkable work of FAITH HEALING carried on first at Möttlingen, and subsequently at Bad Boll. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. BLUMHARDT. With Portrait.

"This book contains some most remarkable things, it being the history of a most remarkable man, full of zeal, full of love, full of faith, full of the spirit of prayer, and living in close communion with his God: he was an immense power through the Spirit in the towns and villages of his native land. It will be read with considerable interest; and the Christian reader will be compelled to exclaim, 'What hath God wrought!'"—Baptist Messenger.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE. FIFTH THOUSAND.

Chats with Children about Bible Birds. By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I. With Beautiful coloured Frontispiece, and numerous other Engravings. Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"This little book is a perfect gem. It is a luxury to handle, and luxury to look at; and, we may add, most instructive to read. The skill of printer and bookbinder seem to have been exhausted in the get-up of this charming little gift-book."
Preacher's Analyist.

By A.L.O.E. With Frontispiece in Colour. Cloth boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"This book is a gem. The invalid artist sketching his pictures and telling his wondful stories is a tender and beautiful portraiture. The get-up of the volumes is a credit to the publishers. It will make a fine gift-book fit for any recipient."
Christian Commonwealth.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES:

As Seen in the Tabernacle and its various Offerings. By Rev. G. RODGERS. With Frontispiece, and numerous smaller Illustrations. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."
The Christian.

NINETEENTH THOUSAND

NOTES ON BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred subjects. By S. R. BRIGGS and JOHN H. ELLIOTT. Tinted covers, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"This is a book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the Class Teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation; and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive.—Christian Progress.

SEVENTH THOUSAND.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES:

In Order to Abiding Communion with God. Also Suggestions for Bible Readings and Study; and a Plan of Consecutive Daily Reading. By DR. J. ANDERSON, M.R.C.S. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"In a compact form, the work contains more valuable and varied information as to the Word of God and its connective teaching, than we have yet seen in any volume of a like size. We would earnestly urge every lover of the word, to procure and carefully read the book."—Word and Work.

GEORGE WHITEFIELD.

A LIGHT RISING IN OBSCURITY. By J. R. ANDREWS, Barrister-at-Law. With Portrait. Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

PESENTATION EDITION, with Steel Portrait. Cloth, bevelled boards, 5s.

"The popular and powerful preacher, whose efforts synchronized with those of the Wesleys, is here set before us in a striking piece of portraiture; and the extracts from his diaries give many life-like touches to the sketch. The details of his work, both in America and in this country, are full and complete, and afford a striking proof of his immense capacity and unceasing energy."
Publishers' Circular.

CHRIST LIFTED UP. SECOND THOUSAND.

By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST, of Shotts. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"Right well has the Author done his work in this charming book. In the first part he exhibits 'CHRIST LIFTED UP' on the cross; and deals in an inexpressibly sweet and tender manner with the words and spirit of Jesus while nailed to the tree. In the second part, Christ risen from the dead, and exalted to the right hand of the throne of God, is evidently set forth before our eyes. In both sections there is much sound exposition; and the book from beginning to end sparkles with fresh, and beautiful, and inspiring thoughts."
Primitive Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

FIDELIA FISKE:

The Story of a Consecrated Life. With Engraved Portrait. By Rev. W. GUEST. Presentation Edition: Cloth elegant, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.; Cheap Editions: Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"Here is truth stranger and more thrilling than fiction; the incidents of a missionary career which is to the glory of God and of His Truth."

CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN"

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

INTERESTING LETTER from SELKIRK.

Mr. J. AITKEN wrote me in March last for his father, who was troubled with cough from severe cold on the chest. Writing afterwards, he says: "I am pleased to inform you that my father is quite better, having derived great benefit from your medicine."

What gives more interest to this case is that Mr. J. A. himself had been an old patient, and says: "I feel I am not writing to a stranger, but a friend. Both I and Mr. E., for whom I also got your medicine, benefited unspeakably. I feel convinced that but for this we would not have been alive to-day."

CASE of SEVERE COUGH.

J. STUART, writing me from 42, Grosvenor-square, says: "I procured a bottle of your medicine, and sent it to my brother in Scotland, who suffered from a very severe cough. I am thankful to say it completely cured him. He thinks it invaluable, and will not fail to recommend it. With many thanks, &c."

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

THE FRENCH VAUDOIS IN THE HIGH ALPS are now in danger of perishing of cold and hunger from the gradual exhaustion of the scanty soil. A solution of the problem how to deliver them has at last been found, namely, by removing them in detachments to Algeria. The first experiment has succeeded. The entire cost is £160 per family, to be refunded for following detachments. The Paris Committee have now £1,800 in hand towards transporting the next band of 20 families. An earnest appeal is made by them to British Christians for help.

At the request of the Paris Committee, Dr. Gustave Monod, President, and with the warm approval of the Dean of Ripon, President of the Lyons Committee, donations will be thankfully received by Donald Matheson, Esq., 120, Queen's-gate, London; or may be paid to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, London, account of FRENCH VAUDOIS FUND.

BISHOP PRICE AND THE REV. A. W. EVANS make an earnest appeal for £250 to build a school and mission-room at Ilfracombe. Our work amongst the young is almost at a standstill for want of room. Will every reader contribute, that the building may commence at once. This is an absolute need. Any information will be gladly given by H. T. 12,000 PEOPLE WITHOUT ANY PLACE OF WORSHIP.

IN the Eastern part of Plumstead there are 14,000 souls, and accommodation for 1,500 only, in church, chapel, and hall. Amongst this large working-class population (principally employed in Woolwich Arsenal) Mission Work has been earnestly carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Richardson, through whose instrumentality many souls have been led to Christ. The need of a Hall in which to carry on and extend this important work is now pressingly felt, and it is proposed to erect a plain, commodious building for unsectarian Mission-work in all its branches. A site for the Hall has been kindly promised by J. R. Jolly, Esq., J.P., on lease for 99 years at a very low rental. The cost of the building is estimated at £1,000, and the annual expense of the Mission, including Missionary's stipend, £150. Contributions, however small, will be most thankfully received by the Treasurer, W. H. LEWIS, Esq.; London and Provincial Bank (Woolwich Branch), to the credit of the Gordon Mission Hall, Plumstead, Kent; or J. H. KADWELL, Esq., Secretary, 11, Conway-road; and GEORGE RICHARDSON, Missionary, 32, Majendie-road, Plumstead; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

Notes and Comments.

EXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Rev. Dr. J. A. cfadyen, of Manchester.

As the regulations of the Post Office do t permit the separately printed appeals at are inserted in our issues at this season be considered as "supplements," the mbers in which they appear have to come der book post rate. The present issue, th its six "insets," being over four ounces weight, will require an inland postage of ree-halfpence. Those of our readers who rward their copies to others will, we trust, reconciled to the increased postage on is occasion by the fact that we have pro-ded them with eight additional pages of teresting reading matter.

Next Wednesday the joyous word will gain sound in our ears, "The Word be-ame flesh and dwelt among us." It is faith a Person that has in it strength and lness of peace; and this the Incarnation ives to man. He who could become a edeeming Mediator must stand in perfect llowship with the human race, and in per-ect fellowship with God; and it is of this, the ublimest and most consolatory of truths, that hristmas reminds us. He who would reveal he depths of Divine love, and also of Divine ighteousness, must do so by visible contact t once with God and with man. He in the nidst of the ages is the fulness of deity, ramed in our humanity, to make atonement or it, and at the same time to be the erfecter of all who should be united to Him y faith. Let the season then joyfully each us that it is Christ alone who is the eal and proper substance of our Chris-ianity.

Appeals for help towards supplying the odily and spiritual needs of our poorer brethren come thick and fast at this season. We should be glad, with the help of our readers, to respond to many of these calls as we have done in former years. Mean-while we have scarcely any available funds in hand.

Surely at Christmas time there are few to whom God has given abundance of this world's goods who can harden their hearts or close their purses. But we may all have a care that our gifts, whether of time, money, or talents, spring from a true and right motive, and that they be not a mere salve to the conscience. There is truth in the saying that "the devil is at one end of every good action."

We deeply regret to learn that news has come to hand of the death, by fever, of Mr. Thomas Morris (late of Walthamstow), and of Mr. Gall, which took place about the middle of October. Both workers, it will be remembered, were in the party of helpers who went out to join Mr. F. S. Arnot in his missionary work in Central Africa. Mrs. Morris is on her way home. Details have not been received, and are anxiously awaited by a wide circle of sorrowing friends.

Three out of Mr. Arnot's party have thus been called to their rest. The loss of these valuable lives ought not to slacken home effort, but rather to increase it, so that native workers may be found as soon as possible for carrying on a work that is fraught with such peril to Europeans.

We have received, with much sorrow, the following letter from the headquarters of the Salvation Army, dated December 16 :—

With very great regret I have to inform you that the latest news with regard to Mrs. Booth is of the saddest description. On Sunday last violent bleeding commenced, and at the same time her suffering very greatly increased. The ordinary drugs used to lessen pain have hitherto almost entirely failed of effect, so that her agony during the week has frequently been most intense; and this, combined with the extreme weakness resulting from loss of blood, leaves us but little room for hope that her life can be much longer spared. She remained all yesterday in so precarious a condition that the doctor urged the General and Mr. Bramwell Booth not to leave her on any account to-day. This morning we learn that her condition is decidedly improved. With all the members of her family who are in England around her, Mrs. Booth continues to be marvellously calm and peaceful, in spite of all her agonies. The General and the family are also marvellously upheld amid the wearying and painful anxieties of the sick-room.

We sincerely hope that the forecast of the Paris correspondent of The Times, from which we quote as follows, will be ratified by events :—

According to the best information I can obtain, the prospect of prolonged peace has never for fifteen years been so tangible. From one end of Europe to the other the necessity of such a peace seems to be apparent to those controlling the fate of nations, and everywhere, after weighing the immediate and inevitable consequence of a war, rulers seem to have shrunk with terror from it. If by the light of this impression, an intelligent glance is cast over Europe, the confidence in prolonged peace will seem fully warranted.

These words come with peculiar acceptance on the eve of the peace-telling Christmas season.

It is hoped that the circular which the President of the Local Government Board has lately addressed to the local authorities of London, pointing out the grave responsibilities incurred in neglecting the dwellings of the working classes, may result in some real, earnest effort to cope with the grave evils of overcrowded and unhealthy dwellings. The lately issued report of the Royal Commission on this subject, abundantly bears out the statement in the circular that the local authorities are able, "by a strenuous and judicious exercise of the powers which the legislature has conferred upon them for this purpose, to effect a very material improvement."

It appeared in evidence before the Commission that only two out of thirty-eight responsible local authorities in London have made proper use of the large powers which they already possess. Two most fruitful sources of evil are to be found in the fact that many of these wretched dwellings (so-called!) are owned by members of vestries and local boards, some of whom are house-farmers and publicans, and that the staff of inspectors—some of them with no proper qualification for their duties — is utterly inadequate. This report (Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode. 8d.) should be in the hands of all who would understand this vital and complicated question. It will be useless, however, to make a fresh law, if it is only to share the fate of so many existing Acts, and to become practically a dead letter.

The powers given to the Board of Trade under the Railway Traffic Act will be put in force in the course of a few months. The railway companies will then have to furnish returns of the number of hours worked by all persons connected with the running of passenger trains, and a limit of ten hours will, it is thought, be insisted upon. This seems to be quite as much in the interest of the public as in that of the men; but surely it is essential that the measure should be brought to bear upon all railway servants alike on grounds of justice and humanity. We trust, too, that the Sunday attendance will be limited where it cannot be suppressed altogether.

One of the most encouraging features of the great movement of modern missions is the growing enthusiasm among medical and other students in this and other countries. Fifty years ago medical missionaries were almost unheard of; now a Missionary Society without its medical missionaries can scarcely be found. We have before us a list of the names of 125 men and women holding British qualifications, at the present moment working side by side, and in conjunction with the missionaries of the various societies. On another page we give an account of a missionary meeting among medical students at the London Hospital, to bid farewell to Dr. F. H. Taylor (son of Mr. Hudson Taylor), who will soon leave for China.

An esteemed correspondent would be glad to assist with Christian counsel, prayer, and correspondence, any man of independent means who may be called to go and evangelise amongst the Aimara Indians and the Quicuas, of Peru and Bolivia—a very promising field. Letters sent to our care, addressed "R. A.," will be forwarded.

We hope many of the friends of missions have read the intensely interesting and pathetic papers by Sir W. Hunter, entitled, "An Old Missionary," that have appeared in The Contemporary Review. The picture they afford of the patient fidelity of the remote mission workers in foreign climes, and of the gentle unifying influences of the Christian faith, simply and stedfastly held, is a new and delightful chapter in the romance of missions.

Another article in the December Contemporary ought to claim attention. Mrs. Fawcett returns to the subject of the employment of children in theatres, and has no difficulty in supporting her contention that such employment is strongly inimical to their best interests, physical and moral. While expressing thankfulness at what the legislation of last session did to protect the helpless children, she avers that much yet remains to be done :—

Since I have taken an interest in this subject, I have received letters from all parts of the country, making strong complaints of the inadequacy of the arrangements for the safety, comfort, and decency of the employés of many theatres.

It is impossible to deny the justice of Mrs. Fawcett's contention that theatre children require at least as much "protection from premature employment and work at unsuitable hours" as those engaged in other occupations.

Seeing that France and its people have attracted so much attention of late, we learn with much regret that the McAll Mission is suffering from lack of support, and that unless fresh aid be at once forthcoming some thirteen or fourteen stations in various parts of the country must necessarily be abandoned. English money has been freely spent in the gay capital this year, and no doubt many of our readers have financially aided in spreading the Word of God during the Exhibition, but we trust that so good a work as Mr. McAll's will not be further hampered for want of funds.

The gentleman who writes under the signature of "Grant Allen" professes to have discovered the secrets of creation. In a recent paper on "Evolution," after generalising about mind being "built up from the simplest raw elements of sense and feeling;" of nerves having "built up themselves out of the soft tissues;" and of "pigment spots, sensitive to light and shade," having "grown by infinite gradations into the human eye, or the myriad facets of bee and beetle," he says :—

Stage by stage the continuous process has gone on unceasingly, from the jelly fish, with its tiny black specks of eyes, through infinite steps of progression, induced by ever-widening intercourse with the outer world, to the final outcome in the senses and the emotions, the intellect and the will of civilised man. Mind begins as a vague consciousness of touch or pressure on the part of some primitive, shapeless, soft creature; it ends as an organised and co-ordinated reflection of the entire physical and psychical universe on the part of a great cosmical philosopher.

It is a pity that such fanciful theorisings should, in many quarters, be accepted as scientific fact. Scientific writers protest against the dogmatism of theology. Surely, there is no need to go beyond their own borders in search of the dogmatic.

A noteworthy pamphlet, entitled, "An Appeal to the Hindoo Community," has recently been published in Calcutta. The following is a summary :—

The life-blood of our society is fast ebbing away, owing chiefly to the influence of Christianity. As the result of national apathy, Christian missions are in a fair way of accomplishing their object by slowly changing our ideas with regard to our moral, social, and domestic life. The systematic efforts of these bodies, unless counteracted, will cause a mighty collapse at no distant date. Access is now obtained to our households by female emissaries, and our little girls in schools are taught absurd Bible stories and to believe in Jesus. It is impossible to hold our own if we do not, in determined opposition, rise up as one man.

A missionary in Bengal conceives that the appearance of the pamphlet is due to the work going on among Hindoo women; its publication, however, should, as the London Society's Chronicle points out, be an encouragement both in England and India.

A long-standing reproach to modern civilisation in Egypt is about to be altogether removed. The "corvée," or the forced labour system there, is to be abolished. The fellaheen, it is true, have had the privilege of purchasing exemption from compulsory State service; but this self-enfranchisement plan has not been generally practicable, as the poorer field hands could never muster means enough to free themselves. The Egyptian Government have resolved to do away with the "corvée" at one stroke, and to provide for the additional cost of public works by imposing a small land-tax. It is satisfactory to find that an odious and grievous form of partial human slavery will soon be numbered with the things that are past.

Scarcely less terrible than the results of the slave trade in Africa are those of the drink traffic in that country. Through the introduction of vile intoxicating liquors, the natives have been sunk to a state of appalling degradation. Mr. Joseph Thomson describes a certain part of the African coast as "a kind of Hades, peopled by brutalised human beings whose punishment seems to be a never-ending thirst for drink." Sooner or later frightful retribution must overtake those who have lured the ignorant African into an appetite for what is degrading him below the level of a brute, and then cutting him off the face of the earth. The nations of Christendom might righteously regard the African liquor-seller in the same light as the African slave hunter.

The Shah of Persia has turned to some account the observations he made during his journeys through Europe. He has instructed his ministers to select from the laws and regulations of Western countries such as can be adapted and applied immediately in his own Oriental dominion, and also such as can be introduced by degrees. Moreover he has announced his readiness to divest himself of such measure of the absolute authority he now possesses as may be necessary to secure the success of reforms designed to promote the security, progress, wealth, and prosperity of his subjects. No wonder the Persians have received the publication of this programme of their sovereign with enthusiasm and satisfaction. Is not the present moment an opportune one for renewed Christianising efforts in Persia?

SCRIPTURE never blinks the defects of its heroes. Its portraits do not smooth out wrinkles, but, with absolute fidelity, give all faults. That pitiless truthfulness is no small proof of their inspiration. If these historical books were simply fragments of national records, owning no higher source than patriotism, they would never have blurted out the errors and sins of David and Solomon as they do.—Dr. Alexander McLaren.

BETHEL SANTHAL MISSION.—Pastor Haegert writes :—During the last six months patients from 177 villages were attended, relieving much woe and suffering. This month twenty of our people visited two melas (religious heathen feasts), and disposed of 1000 Gospels and a lot of tracts. Fifteen persons were baptized during the last six months on their profession of faith in Christ. God helping, I shall build Bethany, a new mission station, this cold season.

Inter-University Conference

A CONFERENCE of University men recently took place at Oxford, which was probably the most important and representative one that has yet been held in this country. Delegates were present from the Universities of Dublin, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Yale (U.S.A.), as well as from several of the Colleges at Oxford and Cambridge.

The subject of the Conference was "The aim and scope of a University Christian Union," which resolved itself, practically, into a consideration of ways and means of carrying on Christian work in the University. It is a very vexed question as to how much of his time an undergraduate may, during his College course, legitimately give to Christian work. Some direct so much attention to it that they fail in their examinations, and thus defeat the object for which they went to College. Others devote all their energy to study, and do no Christian work at all. It is obvious that either extreme should be avoided.

These points were impartially discussed at the Conference (which was presided over by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, M.A., Principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford), and various suggestions were put forward as to the most efficient means of combining Christian and College work. Personal consistency of walk was of course urged as an element without which no active service could succeed. Other features, such as Christian Unions, College Meetings, were considered. Coming as the undergraduates do from all parts of the country, and drawn from all sorts of associations, it is not surprising to find that wide differences of opinion exist even among the Christian men. Hence the value of any union which will achieve (as one speaker happily defined it) "a temporary forgetting of differences." The Chairman, in summing up the varied points which had been presented, described the aim of the Conference by the one word, Definiteness—in purpose, in organisation, and in work. First of all, the Christian men must themselves be bound together by one desire; secondly, they should endeavour to reach fellow students; and thirdly, to lead the outside world to Christ.

It was interesting to note the different features which may be said to characterise the several Universities, each having its own sphere in which it especially excels. It is greatly to be desired that more frequent opportunities should be given for the Christian men of our various centres of learning thus to meet together; for, by comparing notes, they cannot but be stimulated to launch out into paths that they have respectively hitherto left untried.

The presence of Mr. J. B. Reynolds (from Yale) was a token of the anxiety felt by our American colleagues for fellowship and union in the one aim of winning young men for Christ. Mr. Reynolds has spent some months on this side in visiting our British Universities, and in creating an interest in the more go-ahead methods of Christian work which are a feature of American College life. He was also successful in inducing several undergraduates to visit Mr. Moody's "Summer School," at Northfield, this year; and it is confidently believed that as British and American university men are brought together, a reciprocal benefit will ensue.

MR. D. L. MOODY began a series of evangelistic services in Dayton, Ohio, on November 13, which continued one week. Mr. Moody (says the New York Independent) preached seventeen times. His sledge-hammer blows against coldness, worldliness, and inactivity in the churches had a telling effect. His appeals to the unconverted were so searching, tender, and irresistible that deep conviction was sealed on many hearts. At the after-meeting scores of persons presented themselves as inquirers, many of whom were hopefully converted. From Dayton Mr. Moody went to Jamestown, New York.

The End of the Year.—I.

BY REV. WILLIAM GUEST.

THE years of this agitating century hasten to their close. Still the earth bears witness to its measureless wastes of human cruelty and woe, and still its cries and groans, because of sin, ascend day and night continually. But from the heart of the godly there goes up the threefold prayer to the Father in heaven: HALLOWED BE THY NAME: THY KINGDOM COME: THY WILL BE DONE ON EARTH. What Divine wisdom discloses itself in dictating such a prayer! In a world where that glorious Name is dishonoured through vast continents of idolatry; where men are in subjection to a reign of darkness; and where wickedness thwarts and opposes that holy Will, what could be so suited to these apostate conditions as that "after the manner" of this threefold supplication Christ's disciples should pray?

The prayer enwraps a prophecy and a promise. If the night still holds its empire, the darkest hour has its forerunning gleams of coming dawn.

DARKNESS AND LIGHT

are now struggling for the mastery. Contradictions of fearfulness and of hopefulness are overreaching human thought. Under an apparent apathy in relation to Christianity, there is profound concern. "Every question is resolving itself into one of religion." Under the axiom which, we are told, is swaying the cultured classes, that intelligence implies infidelity, there is a deep disquietude. Hindoos and Chinese who are hostile to the message that is at length reaching them are angry under a dim anticipation of its triumph. Priests of Romanist superstition are obeying plottings which are mysteriously restrained. Warlike forces which forebode not the crippling, but the annihilation of empires, are made to pause in bewildering uncertainties. The world seems at once to be approaching a dark chaos, and to be standing on the dawn of light, and a wave of awe is passing over thoughtful minds in every community. "Let no man beguile you by any means," saith inspiration. "The day of the Lord" must be preceded by the falling away, and the full disclosure of malign hostilities and evil working.

"OFFENCES MUST COME,"

were the words of the great Deliverer. His eternal plan involved the manifestation of "the deceivableness of unrighteousness." He taught that there would be traitors in his camp who would reveal the thoughts of the faithless. So has it been. When our blessed religion came among men it came where self, as a self-centred Ego, was in full activity. Let us see how holy light was darkened, and vital force weakened. The ambitious adopted the religion of Christ as an instrument of intrigue; the vain plotted for the places it created; the covetous regarded it as gain; the mean cast an eye on its repute; the arrogant claimed its authority; and the worldly in due time adopted it as a fashion. And so has it continued. Through his own blessed name cupidity still seeks to gain those who are called Christ's, and pride to transform his revelations. "The devil is about to cast some of you into prison," said the Lord to a church of old. He foresaw it, permitted it; and permitted it in order that that church might be "tried," while He fixed the time during which the tribulation should last (Rev. ii. 10).

This is that which the year 1889 has increasingly brought out—the attempt to subvert the supreme authority of the Christian Scriptures. It works in three ways: in the form of Sacerdotalism, of Rationalism, and of Secularism. These are three old foes, for falsehood is limited in its resources. Yet have they new modes and methods for this age. Let us see how they operate.

SACRAMENTARIANISM.

It is sixty years since Tractarianism sowed the seeds of an intended reaction against Protestantism; and now the facts are incontestible that hundreds of thousands in the Church of England hold no longer St. Paul's doctrine of justification by faith; and that the upper classes and the highest stratum of the middle class, with ministers and even bishops at their head, have returned to the Romish doctrines of absolution, confession, penance, prayers for the dead, and invocation of saints. Such doctrines exalt the ghostly sway of the clergy, and promise to the laity relief from personal responsibility in the matter of their salvation. No language can describe the seriousness of the issue. It has been during this year that the chairman of the English Church Union has unambiguously avowed that the intention is to restore to the English Church the Mass and pre-Reformation principles. The logical necessity of this is the recognition of the supremacy of the Roman Pontiff as the Vicar of Christ, and but for those we call "the people" we should see a more rapid and sinister advance to a system which in its subtlety of working is the very "Mystery of Iniquity."

A MISLEADING BREADTH.

In addition to this source of danger must be reckoned that which with terrible truth is termed "Free Theology." The Church is now asked to recognise as Christian believers men who deny both the miraculous Incarnation and Resurrection of the Lord! As to the Death of Jesus, the Sacramentarians teach that the Sacrifice of the Cross was not a finished one, and the Rationalists that there has been no sacrifice at all. Yea, more, although this latter approach to infidelity is serious enough, men now claim to be Christian teachers to whom the Bible is no more than a collection of the literature and the conceptions of spiritual men; to whom the early chapters of Genesis are a fabulous Oriental poem; the Levitical services of no value as types of things to come, but rather hindrances to faith; the Psalms pious songs, containing nothing Messianic; the prophets shrewd politicians, who made mere guesses respecting coming events; the Gospels in part spurious, and the Apostle Paul a Jew whose letters are of no supreme doctrinal authority. Well might Dr. Delitzsch, one of the greatest theologians of Europe, write at the beginning of the year that his rejoicing at one period over the rejuvenescence of theology had been turned into bitterness, as he now witnessed the deep gulf between the old theology and the new, and beheld the new structure undermining and overthrowing the old. That gulf is now so widening as that men are taught a doctrine of Divine Fatherhood which in effect affirms that there is no holy antipathy of God against evil, and no wrath of God which a sinner need fear.

And the false teaching has always been seen in the life. In relation to teacher and taught, the fact is true that "what a man believes, and what he does not believe are the lever and limit of his doings." Solemnly has the veteran theologian just referred to said: "A theologian who denies that sinfulness is the inheritance of man from his birth; that man is by nature a child of wrath, and has to confess himself a sinner worthy of condemnation; who denies that Christ by substitutionary work and suffering has satisfied the righteousness of God, and made for his love an open path; who denies that we can thus enter into real relation of communion with God and the risen Christ —such a theologian has by these misconceptions rendered himself from the outset unable to experience and personally to test the work of grace in his own soul." May God in mercy cause this weighty warning to be pondered by congregations who are following these misleading guides.

SECULARISM.

This word has hitherto described an organisation whose principle has been that in ignorance of spiritual pleasures and advantages its members went in for secular things only. Even among these men the powerlessness of the principle to hold them together is being made manifest. Alas to have to say it, it is professed believers in eternal realities who now are in danger of taking up the notion. They see the world inviting men and women to drive away serious thoughtfulness; to be amused; to be merry; to forget God and their souls; and to dance down the steep of laughter and self-forgetfulness to the brink of perdition. And what do they do? They say those who forget God need amusement. "We will entertain them. 'The harp and the viol, the tabret and the pipe' shall be in our feasts. There shall be prayer, but only short, that the secular song may be encored. Ungodly men need entertainment, and we, members of the Church of God, will enter on these lines. We have pleasant rooms. Although built for other uses, they will be cheap and attractive. Come, let us be an entertaining society; and since spiritual and eternal things do not draw the people, let us try such as are secular."

Do any say these church entertainments are a John the Baptist's mission to call to repentance? A call to repentance, when the professedly saved have their songs and dialogues to convulse the unsaved with laughter! Inquire in churches where the experiment has been made, and you will find spiritual religion in decay, devout persons driven off, and the genuine functions of a church of God ruled out. The entertaining and the jocund are bringing to the fore in hitherto called Christian societies men who have no sympathy with downright New Testament religion. Their tastes are secular, as are their pleasures. Their cry is for something new. The Gospel is to them old-fashioned. They neither crave nor pray for the converting and sanctifying grace of the Spirit. And should this lust of entertainment go forward, as the incoming tide threatens, unsubstantiality will be the mark of sermons; great saving truths will be lowered; daughters will be worldly and sons sceptical; the poor will no longer have the Gospel preached to them; and with the advance of this vulgarised and degrading process, the end of the century will see rooms built for downright Christian work, transformed into places where the worldly come to furnish amusement, and into halls where cheap recreations can be had.

Blessed be God, while this is the outlook, and Secularism, and Rationalism, and Sacerdotalism are gathering strength, and in their threefold directions are aiming to change our Protestant and spiritual Christianity, of faithful men is appearing. They are those who, refusing to be perverted by the vain pretensions of Ritualists, or by the false learning of theological negationists, or the weak-minded conceptions of the caterers for entertainment, maintain, with the world's greatest thinkers, that religious causes lie at the root of the welfare of peoples; and that evangelicalism (an honest interpretation of the New Testament) has exercised, and must continue to exercise, the most powerful influence ever known upon the great problem of humanity, viz., how to bring near a kingdom of God among men. Nor are they mistaken as to satisfying enjoyments. A Sunday-school teacher, who leads her class near to the Saviour, and unites them on a winter's night in sweet hymns, and friendly helpfulness, does far more to entertain them than if she brought all worldly emptinesses to her aid. Blissful are the ways of the Lord. Living are those waters that flow from heavenly cisterns. God only can fill our need, and there are those everywhere whose soul has delighted itself in this fatness, and who will not bid men labour for that which satisfieth not. They know, indeed, that myriad sources of happiness, of art, and taste, are opened to man, and are to be made common; but as those whose vocation is to bring into a world of rebels the reign of God, they will not invite to any of these things, except under the obvious ascendency of his righteous claims.

A NEW ORDER

Let none, therefore, tremble for the ark of the Lord. No mortal tongue can tell, nor pen describe, the number in our days of the avowed followers of Christ, who seek to shape their creed and lives, not by the speciously and falsely called "new liberty," but by the unaccommodated language of the Christian Scriptures. Never, it may be affirmed, were there so many of these as now among the industrious classes of England. And while they are in pulpits, they are in the council chambers of the nation; in the army; on directors' boards; and in the foremost ranks of science. They are found among members of the civil professions, and in the fields of literature. Their Christianity is most pronounced in walks of commerce, and business gains are consecrated, as never before, to the countless schemes of modern philanthropy. They are not ashamed of Christ in the mansions of nobles, and go forth from homes of plenty to strive, with a self-forgetfulness hitherto unknown, and ministries of womanliness hitherto unequalled, to satisfy Christ's thirst for the redemption of the poor and the degraded. The Saviour's love lies no longer merely on official lips, but is taught in activities innumerable by those who not only confess Him, but share his spirit when He said: "I am among you as one that serveth." And such as these are found in every part of the United Kingdom, and in Europe; while in the other hemisphere they are worthily striving to bring back the old America instead of the new, and in south-eastern waters a new Australia, instead of the old which was corrupted by settlers who bore to it the greediness for gold and evil living.

flow from these facts. (1) Let none think that the cause of Christ is going back because of present evils which the Spirit "expressly" declared would mark the last days. Ecclesiastical organisations, and religious denominations, are rushing into errors whereby the potency of their names will perish. The undermining defection of Israel will be repeated—the listening to man. But everywhere, through the Spirit's grace, there are those who are being established in Christ, and anointed to listen only to the words which God has spoken through his Son. (2) By them unostentatiously, but most surely, the reign of God is being hastened. They meet for prayer; they gather in conference; they encourage evangelists; they raise missionary obligations to a higher level; they sustain many of the most benevolent and noblest movements of the age; they encourage young men in associations which are the hope of the world; they stand out in their different communities as the most decided advocates of Scriptural religion. Hard names are thrown at them, but they know that railing, especially from errorists and false professors, has always surrounded the advanced servants of God. (3) It is these godly ones who are answering the Saviour's last prayer for the oneness of his followers. Yet let it be observed: the oneness is not that Christian union which so many long for. It is something immeasurably higher. If Churchmen and Dissenters formed one communion; if Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Congregationalists were merged into one church, it may doubted whether the gain would equal the expectation. Far above such a union rose the Redeemer's prayer. This was, that his disciples might be one in their measure in that infinite sense of the wrong of sin, and in the boundless, inexpressible, and pitying love for sinners, which dwelt in the Father and the Son. And it is these believers, of whom these lines speak, who are not only of one mind and heart with one another, but one in sympathy, compassion, self-denial, and co-operation with God; who are teaching men to believe, and are accomplishing the salvation of the world. The visibility of these watchers is being more and more marked as the year closes.

Their relation to the present state of the professing Church must be indicated in the next paper.

Tunbridge Wells.

CHINGLEPUT, INDIA.—The Free Church of Scotland Mission has had a school for girls in Chingleput since 1845. At present there are two schools with about 190 pupils. Other fifty pupils are taught by the two zenana teachers and the Bible-woman. Besides these schools, there are others in certain towns and villages of the Chingleput district.

ILFRACOMBE, DEVON.—Bishop Price, of the Free Church of England, who has laboured for many years in this town is in need of a new school and mission-room, the present accommodation being insufficient. It is proposed to erect a school and mission-room over the church, thus saving ground rent, at a cost of £250, towards which some £60 has been subscribed. Information can be had on applying to the curate, Rev. A. W. Evans, 5, Greenclose-road, Ilfracombe.

SUNDAY TRADING.—For some time an effort has been made by a local committee to induce the tradesmen of Lambeth, and especially the butchers, to cease from Sunday trading. About forty of these signed an agreement to close if all competing tradesmen would do so, but the movement fell through in consequence of the refusal of half-a-dozen. Two have, however, resolved to close, independent of the action of others. "Local Option" would have secured this boon, and we trust that before long it will be in the power of the majority of the inhabitants of any locality to secure the blessings of a fully observed day of rest.

The Priesthood of Christ.—II.

By Rev. C. CLEMANCE, B.A., D.D

APPOINTED BY GOD.

(4) Our Lord was appointed by the Father to be our High Priest. (Cf. Ps. cx. 4; Heb. v. 5, 6, x. 7, 9.) "No man taketh this honour unto himself." "Christ glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest." His entire mission here, though undertaken for our sakes, with the absolute spontaneity of self-consuming love, was yet in entire subjection to the will, and in fulfilment of the appointment, of the Father. This should never be lost sight of. For even when we contend for our Lord's equality with the Father in the dignity of his nature, we are bound to contend equally for his subordination to the Father in respect of his mission. He came to do, not his own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. It was his meat and his drink to finish the work of Him that sent Him. Hence at every stage the Father testified of the Son. At his birth, heaven poured forth a flood of song. At his baptism, the Father sealed the mission of the beloved Son by a voice from on high, and the Spirit, by hovering over Him as a dove. At the temptation, He was succoured by an embassy of angels. At the approach to his deepest sorrow, there came to Him a voice from heaven. In the garden an angel strengthened Him. By his tomb angels sat, and from the earth they escorted Him to his seat above. So, repeatedly, were his words confirmed: "The Father which hath sent Me hath borne witness of Me." He who was "to bring us to God" had thus amplitude of proof that He came from God!

A SACRIFICE FOR SIN.

(5) As our High Priest, He has offered Himself as a sacrifice for sin. (Cf. Isa. liii.; Matt. xx. 28; Mark x. 45; John x. 15; Rom. iii. 20—25; Heb. ix. 11, 12, x. 12—14; 1 John ii. 1, 2, iv. 10.) Such are a few of the Scripture passages which represent the "offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all," as a propitiatory sacrifice. Scriptural statements shut us up to the truth that Christ gave Himself a ransom—that He paid the redemption-price for us.* The position of those who would regard the death of Christ as merely an example of heroic suffering for the sake of bearing witness to the truth, appears to us to be singularly weak and shallow. For, we ask, When does such a death as Christ bore, give us an example of suffering virtue? Evidently, when the sufferer is shut up to this alternative—either to recant or to suffer, to lie or to die. There would be no virtue in his suffering death if He could deliver Himself therefrom without a stain upon his virtue. In fact, in that case, it would be unjust to Himself and to others were He to allow his life needlessly to be taken away! But what said our Lord? "No man taketh my life from Me: I lay it down of Myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." If Christ spake truly, where was the virtue in his being a martyr when there was no occasion for it; and if He did not speak truly, where was his virtue at all? Besides,

* I am quite aware that it has become unfashionable in several quarters to make Scripture the ultimate standard of appeal. But when it has become wrong to appeal, on any topic, to the writings or sayings of those who know most about it, we may reconsider our method.

the very fact that He had power to take his life again puts the argument from example altogether on one side, since there is no parallel between his case and that of any other human being whatever.

Nor is the doctrine that Christ offered Himself a propitiatory sacrifice merely, the only view which accords with the statement of Scripture; there were two ends accomplished thereby, which were necessary to secure the all-important issue, that the Divine redemption should rest on the basis of the manifested condemnation of sin, and the manifested righteousness of God. A popular lecturer has recently denied the statement that God is bound to condemn sin. Such denial we cannot understand. To us it seems to belong to the very fundamentals of ethics to affirm that a Righteous Governor, in dealing graciously with sinful men, must make it clear that He is righteous, and that He hates sin with a perfect hatred. Indeed, we venture to declare that, apart from this, the awakened and enlightened conscience cannot be satisfied. For if there be one truth unfolded more clearly than another by the course of the Divine procedure, it is that God's moral laws must be vindicated, that God's honour must be sustained. Yea, more, for Divine forgiveness to be perpetually bestowed without an adequate condemnation of sin, would make the Most High seem to connive at the very iniquity against which his holy law perpetually flames forth.

Nor is this all. But unless the death of Christ was on behalf of others, it is the most appalling enigma in the government of God! For what saith the law? "The man that doeth these things shall live in them." The holy law of a holy God throws its guard around the righteous man. And yet here is One, who was "without sin," yet exposed to the fury and rage of men, to the assaults of the evil one, to treachery and desertion on the part of his friends, to the sense of abandonment by God; and permitted to undergo the most humiliating death. If He, the Righteous One, underwent all this voluntarily, for high and holy purposes, I can understand, wonder, adore, weep, and love; but if it means that under a holy law the holiest one may yet be the most completely deserted, the problem thereby presented would be so fearful that to attempt to grapple with it might well shatter alike both intellect and faith, by plunging us into the very abyss of despair!

Nor let it be said that it is unjust that the innocent should SUFFER FOR THE GUILTY.

For first of all, that the innocent One did suffer is not questioned. So that if He did not suffer for others, the charge of injustice would have even more force. But the demur, in fact, leaves out the gist of the whole matter. That the Just One did suffer for the unjust ones, is in the very forefront of the Christian confession. But (1) the suffering was purely voluntary; (2) it was for reasons which perfectly satisfied the sufferer; (3) it was to receive a corresponding recompense in the salvation of men; (4) it was followed by a new and everlasting glory in his receiving "the name which is above every name." Hence the charge of injustice completely falls.

And from this point we learn to regard the death of Jesus for us as the sublimest example of heroic self-sacrifice that could be set before us; and it is set before us for two reasons: first, that we may learn to say "we love, because He first loved us;" and, secondly, that "the same mind may be in us which was also in Christ Jesus," i.e., that we may acquire the habit of looking at things as Jesus looked at them when, for man's sake, He voluntarily gave Himself up to God on their behalf, standing in their place, that they might stand in his. Thus, thus only, does the death of Christ become a model for us, when it is seen to be the infinite self-sacrifice of infinite love. Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example* that we should follow his steps. Jesus took others' burdens that, in one and the same sublime act, He might condemn sin, and set free the sinner; might conquer sinners by his grace, and light in human hearts a fire of inextinguishable love.

(To be concluded.)

Dr. Barnardo and Romanists.

THERE are many and pressing reasons why Dr. Barnardo's Homes should be specially laid on the hearts of Christian people at the present moment. For some time agents of the Church of Rome have harassed Dr. Barnardo, and so persistently have they persecuted him that the confidence of some seems to have been wavering, for their support has been withheld. Last week an occasion for self-vindication was afforded, and the statement which Dr. Barnardo then made—which is given at considerable length in our present issue—abundantly exposed a conspiracy against himself and his excellent work. Rome hates all endeavour on purely evangelical lines, and consequently she opposes and pursues Dr. Barnardo, as he picks miserable and destitute children from the gutters, and sets their feet in paths of happiness and true wisdom.

The fact that the many institutions under Dr. Barnardo's direction have actually suffered through the wicked plot now laid bare, is particularly grievous. Can there be any reason for withholding the children's bread, or curtailing the godly advantages which the Homes afford them? We rejoice to find that Dr. Barnardo was able, at the meeting referred to, completely to answer the charges and insinuations affecting his honour and motives, which have of late been bandied about in Romish newspapers. Moreover, he was able to explain himself on points which could not, owing to the narrowness of legal forms, be cleared up in Court in a manner altogether satisfactory to his friends.

Rome has, we rejoice to believe, overreached herself in this display of her proselytising zeal. It is devoutly to be hoped that the result will be increased support to such undenominational enterprises as those under Dr. Barnardo's care. Already not a few who know the spirit of Rome have come to see in the Stepney Homes and their associated institutions, objects worthy of their material and moral support. As it has been shown that there is no reason for any wavering, let the cry of the rescued children, over three thousand in number, and the need of thousands of unevangelised poor, young and old, in East London, prompt our readers to give substantial effect to the vote of confidence which was carried so enthusiastically at the Exeter Hall meeting. That God has greatly blessed the work, does not require to be stated, for it is known far and wide. Let the fact be at once realised, however, that the enemy has seriously hindered operations of late. Is the balance-sheet of the closing year to proclaim the fact that Dr. Barnardo's Homes have been under the heel of Roman Catholic oppression? Let it not be, but rather let God's people conspire to send the work forward with a bound, and cheer the director by liberally, heartily, and speedily reversing the reading of the balance-sheet, so that the year may close with a goodly sum in hand.

The Record, in its last week's issue, well said:—

> Exeter Hall has witnessed many scenes, but few more striking demonstrations have been held within its walls than was afforded by the remarkable gathering that assembled there on Tuesday evening last. The Large Hall was densely packed, and the enthusiasm was maintained at white heat from the moment Sir Arthur Blackwood took the chair at eight p.m. until the benediction was pronounced at 10.45 p.m. If anyone anticipated that an attack would be made upon Her Majesty's judges, they were disappointed. The speeches throughout were calm and dispassionate, but, withal, cogent, and the irresistible impression left upon the mind was that Dr. Barnardo is the victim of a conspiracy on the part of the Romanists to harass and hinder him in the work of seeking and saving the destitute and outcast waifs and strays of the land. No speaker claimed for Dr. Barnardo that he was infallible, or that he had not made mistakes. But then, as was aptly pointed out by Sir Arthur Blackwood, he who never makes a mistake never (if the old proverb is to be believed) makes anything. Errors in judgment there might have been, but speakers and audience were unanimous in declaring that Dr. Barnardo was actuated by the highest motives, and by the highest interests of the children under his care; and, as Mr. Gedge forcibly reminded us, it ill became persons who had done comparatively little for the welfare of waifs and strays to criticise the actions of one who had done more for outcast children than any other man in the kingdom."

In the course of his service in the City Temple, on Thursday week, Dr. Parker referred to the case, giving it as his opinion that Dr. Barnardo's position was morally and institutionally right:—

> Dr. Barnardo, said he, has undertaken a very difficult, and, indeed, a very perilous work, and he ought to feel that he does not stand alone in its delicate and dangerous conduct. Dr. Barnardo is not working for himself, but for society, and society should gather around him with every assurance of sympathy and support. The woman Gossage has forfeited every title and claim to consideration. When she sold her boy to the organ-grinders, she parted with her motherhood. I do not care so much about the "No Popery" element in the case, though that is by no means unimportant. What I contend for is, that society has a right to handle all such elements as are represented by the Gossage family, and that in the exercise of that right society must look to such men as Dr. Barnardo to adopt means which experience has proved to be really wise and useful. I hope the whole community will be profoundly excited about this matter, and will see to it that no injury is done to a man who has himself accomplished so much in the salvation of the waifs and strays of the world.

BISHOP CROWTHER.—Our recent portrait of the Bishop of the Niger Territory was engraved from a copyright photograph by Mr. T. C. Turner, by permission of The Missionary Leaves Association. Copies of the original photograph (cabinet size) may be obtained, price 1s. each, from the Secretary, 20, Compton-terrace, Upper-street, Islington, London, N.

PLOUGHMEN IN PERTHSHIRE.—To the Christmas number of The Queen the Duchess of Rutland contributes interesting notes of an autumn in this central Scottish county. She tells of an excellent work among ploughmen begun by Miss Anderson, of Athole-street, Dunkeld. Good books, embracing such subjects as travel, history, temperance, and religion, are lent. After perusal they are passed on to others. Most of these ploughmen live in "bothies," a species of poor barracks. The Duchess says they show great kindness to each other, especially if any are sick.

The First Epistle of Peter.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Regent's Park Chapel.

XIV.—TAKING THINGS PATIENTLY.

1 PETER ii. 21.

THE servants here addressed were the household servants and slaves, so largely employed in the great establishments of that age. Wealth and position made special boast of the vast number of dependents that were maintained. Life was held cheaply enough, and when a slave was once purchased, he cost little to keep. The Roman empire swarmed with such, and they became her ruin.

It is not surprising that large numbers of these poor creatures fled to the shelter of the Christian Church, as the outcast seeks fire and food. There at least was liberty for the captives, and love, and equality between slave and owner, master and serf. The purchase of the soul of the slave had cost the Son of God an equal amount of suffering with that He had endured for the wealthiest. The love that bent over the hut where an Onesimus sheltered, was as strong and tender as that which pleaded with a Philemon. The heaven which awaited the dying Lazarus, was as fair as that which beckoned a martyr Apostle. And so there was a marvellous fascination for the slave in the Gospel; and if we may found any conclusion on the fact that large portions of the Epistles are addressed to them, and that some of the noblest passages are written for their special benefit, we must admit not only that they were to be found on the church rolls, but that the sacred writers entertained towards them a strong and tender sympathy.

The one message which the Spirit of God had for them, and is so often repeated on these pages, may be gathered up in the words: Submit; endure; be subject; take it patiently.

We must remember that they were not able to give notice and leave at their will. Wherever they could do this, without blame, and without detriment to the trust committed to them by God or man, they were at perfect liberty to do so. "If thou mayest be made free, use it rather" (1 Cor. vii. 21). But this was seldom possible. For the most part they had no alternative but to stay where they were till death released them. It was to such that these special exhortations came.

There is a great restlessness among employés throughout society. Servants giving notice. Young people trying to better themselves. Men changing from situation to situation. As a rule, there is not much gained, even in a worldly point of view, from successive changes. It is the steady plodding life which most quickly leads to success and comfort. Still there is no sin in making a change, if it is not made simply from selfish motives, or with an eye to worldly advantage. When the Christian testimony has been clearly given, and perhaps clearly rejected; when our presence is rather an irritant to ungodliness than a persuasive to Christ; when we feel able to ask God clearly to open another door for us, and He has done as we request; when it is possible to take another position without compromising the interests committed to our care; when we can do better for the kingdom of Christ by a change—then there is assuredly no reason against it.

But in many cases, as with these household servants, there is no honourable way out of a position in which God seems to have wedged us. We are in daily contact with grinding tyranny, with almost unbearable cruelty, with an envenomed tongue, with an irritating, captious, trying temper, never satisfied, never pleased. A child with a mother, a nurse with an invalid, an apprentice with an employer, a woman with her husband, where it cannot be altered, and where the obligation, once taken up, must be borne to the bitter end. Here then is the unfailing Divine recipe: when reviled, do not revile again; when buffeted, though doing well, do not retaliate; when scorched and bitten and unjustly accused or punished, be still and take it patiently. And out of all this will come a life which shall not only be like his life who hath set us an example, but which shall also exert a remedial and saving influence on the most violent opposers of his Gospel, while it mounts up to God as an odour of a sweet smell, eliciting his smile of loving approbation.

Two lines of action are here referred to.

I. BUFFETED FOR FAULTS.—We all have made mistakes, and know what it is to be reprimanded or punished. But under such circumstances we have had no just ground for complaint, and our true policy when so situated must be not to excuse ourselves, nor to cast the blame on others or our circumstances; not to flash forth with indignant words, but to take it patiently, or speaking, confess our wrong, and ask to be forgiven.

In this the royal Psalmist has set us a memorable example. When he was slowly descending the long slope of Olivet towards the Jordan, there came out a man of the house of Saul, whose name was Shimei, "and as David and his men went by the way, he went along on the hill's side over against them, and cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and cast dust." And Abishai chafed at it, and asked permission to quench his abuse in blood. "No," said the king, "let him curse, because the Lord hath said unto him, Curse David."

It was as though he felt that his sin demanded public reprimand, and he meekly accepted the permission of God as his appointment. In such a spirit as this should we bear all buffeting which comes to us for our faults. Be still. Sit alone and keep silence. Put your mouth in the dust. Give your cheek to him that smiteth you. The Lord will not cast you off for ever; He will take you again to Himself. But remember there is nothing to glory over in this. It is your common duty. "Let Patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."

II. BUFFETED, THOUGH DOING WELL.—Our superiors, or employers, may be froward, difficult to please, always finding fault; and, though we do our very best, we may meet with nothing but buffeting and rebuke. Still, we are to take it patiently.

There is no harm in quietly and temperately explaining the untruth or the unreasonableness of the accusation; or in showing how we have striven to do our best. When our Master was accused of casting out devils by collusion with their prince, he showed how unreasonable the charge was; and when smitten by the palm of the hand, He said: "If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me?" It is open for us to give a soft answer like this; but if it do not turn away wrath, we must take it patiently.

Be sure that your patience is not mean-spirited cowardice.—There is no virtue in that. But let it arise from conscience toward God. Offer your soul's patient endurance to God upon that altar which sanctifies the gift, and the motive which prompts the sacrifice will be precious in his sight. "This is thankworthy." "This is acceptable with God." And the Greek might bear such a rendering as this: God says, Thank you. Yes, so it is. If in some great house some poor servant, or if in a school some persecuted child, will dare, for God's sake, to choke back the passionate outburst of indignation, and to endure grief, suffering wrongfully, there is a thrill of delight started through the very heart of God, and from the throne God stoops to say, Thank you. The hero-explorer may be thanked by his country and his Queen, but the weakest and obscurest saint may receive the thanks of the Almighty.

We may cultivate this grace of patience by many considerations.—Though that particular allegation may be wrong, yet there have been many occasions in our lives when we have received more praise or thanks than were our due. Balance one against the other. And such is the evil of our hearts, that the germs of sins, which have been wrongly imputed to us, are latent, and only await the opportunity of breaking out; they would have broken out before, but for the grace of God. Besides, does not this desire to receive the praise and esteem of all betoken a very worldly heart? Why should we want human applause? If we had our deserts, instead of one buffet in a life of caresses, we should have but one caress in a storm of buffetings. If the sinless, guileless Saviour was dumb as a sheep before its shearers amid the torrents of abuse that beset Him, surely it becomes as to be still, for there are plenty of causes for rebuke in us, to justify the worst things ever said against us, and many worse than these. A criminal had better bear quietly a sentence for a crime he has not committed, lest by too much outcry he induce investigation into a list of offences, which are not charged against him, because not known.

And in addition, let us think tenderly of the condition of our persecutors.—Alas, for them! How sad, how pitiable are they. Surely they need pity rather than wrath, mercy more than vehemence. Perhaps our uncomplaining meekness may touch them as no words of indignation would; as the sighs and agonies of the early martyrs were pricks and goads in the consciences of their persecutors, driving them to the Lord.

Moreover, it is after all but a small thing to be judged by man.—If he praise, what does it amount to? If he blame, what is it but a puff of smoke, a blank cartridge, a meteor exploding in the air? Life at the longest is short. Eternity is near, even at the doors. And the kiss of God, as we step across the threshold of his presence-chamber, will make us even thankful to have been put into such circumstances of rebuke as enabled us to win so large a reward.

And is it for a moment to be supposed that God will not vindicate us? Of course He will. "Shall not God avenge his own elect, that cry unto Him day and night? I tell you that He will avenge them speedily." "He will bring to light the hidden things of darkness. He will ring forth thy righteousness as the light, and hy judgment as the noonday." We can afford, hen, to give place unto wrath, since He has aid, "Vengeance is mine, I will recompense." Let us commit ourselves, as Jesus did, to Him who judgeth righteously, and we shall find that He will clear us, and cause our enemies to bite he dust, as when Haman led Mordecai in riumph through the streets.

III. THE INDUCEMENTS TO PATIENT ENDURANCE.

(1) As we have already seen, God says, Thank you.—And those thanks will be heard one day by the raptured soul, as it stands almost dazed in his presence. "When did I aught to deserve all this?" And in answer, many a trivial and forgotten incident will be recalled of Christian gentleness and meekness under misrepresentation and rebuke. "This, soul, I beheld in thee, and it made me glad. Welcome, and well done."

(2) For this we were called.—Not to be happy, or saved, or glorified, but to suffer as Jesus suffered. He was the Master of the house, but they spat on Him, smote Him, derided and crucified Him, yet He threatened not. And we have been called to live his life. To make his meaning clear, the Apostle uses words which children could follow. When the Greek schoolmaster taught writing, he made his letters faintly, and the scholar wrote over his outlines. This is the Apostle's thought, and we have been called to repeat each line and turn and curve of the Master's life, so that the world may ever have a living copy of his life before its eyes.

(3) We know we are on the right way for our home.—Our Master has gone through the world, leaving traces of his path behind Him, as in the dense bush of Australia a man will blaze the trunks or snap the twigs, that those who follow may find the way. So as we encounter hatred and rebuke, not for our misdeeds, but because we belong to Christ, and we are able to bear it patiently, we are sure that we are on his track, which leads down into the grave, and through it to the Easter lawns, and up the Ascension steeps, to the banks of the river of water of life, where they follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth.

And is this patience possible? Not to your unaided efforts; but as the gift of the God of Patience through the Holy Ghost. Thrice we are told of the patience of Jesus, who bore threat and wrong without a word of retaliatory threat. Oh, marvellous grace! And it was wrought out by Him, not for Himself alone, but for all who believe. It awaits our appropriation. Let us claim it in all moments of irritation and calumny, saying with Robert Hall, "Calm me, Lamb of God, calm me," or whispering softly, "Thy patience, Lord." So may the Lord direct you into the patience of Jesus Christ.

"A NATIVE SOCIAL REFORM MOVEMENT," says The Times, "has been started in Bombay to discountenance certain existing injurious Hindu customs. No sons are to be permitted to marry under sixteen, and no daughters under ten. No man is to marry after fifty, or marry a second wife during the lifetime of the first. He is also not to drink spirits, save under medical advice. The marriage expenses, in the case of a daughter, are limited to one year's income, and in the case of a son to half a year's income. Another suicide of a child-wife is reported."

ORPHANAGE AT BROUSSA.—Those who know anything about the poverty, ignorance, and misery prevalent in Asiatic Turkey, will know what inestimable good this Institution is doing, and how desirable it is that its sphere of usefulness should be extended, that more poor orphans may be received and trained for Christ and usefulness. Just now the treasury is quite empty and help is asked from the stewards of our Lord Jesus Christ. Pastor G. Baghdasarian is principal. Rev. T. W. Brown, D.D., secretary of the Turkish Missions' Aid Society, 32, The Avenue, Bedford Park, Chiswick, London, is the correspondent in this country.

MEDICAL STUDENTS AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

AN enthusiastic meeting of medical students was held on Thursday, December 12, in the Large College Library of the London Hospital, to bid farewell to Dr. F. H. Taylor, a former student of the hospital, who is shortly proceeding to China, to join the China Inland Mission, of which his father, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, M.R.C.S. (a London Hospital man), is the director.

Dr. T. GILBART SMITH (chairman) said the present condition of China, from a commercial and from a missionary point of view, looked very promising; but he almost regretted that Dr. Taylor was about to be shot into the heart of a country so far removed from the London Hospital.

Dr. J. L. MAXWELL, of the London Medical Missionary Association, spoke of the great importance of medical missions, especially in a country like China. A Chinese audience will listen to no one so readily as to the medical missionary, whose fame often extends to from fifty to four hundred miles from the mission hospital. Although every patient treated by the doctor did not accept the Gospel, many did, and many more carried away with them the impression that the religion of Jesus Christ is a very kind and a very gracious one to man.

Dr. HARFORD BATTERSBY, of St. Thomas's Hospital, who is hoping to proceed to the Soudan on February 8 in connection with the Church Missionary Society, described the enormous district of the Soudan as being 2000 miles long by 500 wide, with a population of sixty millions, many of whom resided in cities of from 70,000 to 100,000 inhabitants. The party of seven, with which he was going to the Niger, would include Mr. Wilmot Brooke, who had already been out there. Dr. Battersby would proceed to Lokoja, where a house, in every way suitable for a hospital, built of stone, had been secured. It was a meeting-point of thousands of natives, who came from the interior to trade.

Dr. SOLTAU (late of Burmah) spoke of the great aid which medicine and surgery is found to be in mission work; he said that so strongly had he felt this that he had returned from the field in order to qualify, and he hoped at some time to return.

Dr. HOWARD TAYLOR said that many were asking why he should go abroad to the Chinese when the need at home is so great. He reminded them of the impressions of the heathenism of East London which most London Hospital men get, especially on a Saturday night; but there was nothing in England at all to compare with the heathenism of China. He described the ordinary life of a Chinaman, and his treatment of women and children. The audience was reminded of the prospects of a medical career at home, and the discomforts of a life in China, which, however, were mere trifles when the end was looked at; if only ten Chinamen could be led to Christ, one would be amply rewarded. The only consideration a Christian should have is "Does God desire me to go abroad or to stay at home?" He referred to the work of his father as director of the China Inland Mission, and said that, after thirty-six years as a missionary, the strain was now telling upon him. His work would probably be to relieve his father of a good deal of necessary detail which falls upon his shoulders. The work of a medical missionary and the superstition of the Chinese in the matter of the effects of medicine were described, and the speaker concluded by relating a remarkable answer to prayer in his father's life when in China. Their rice and money were all done, and nothing was left to keep the hospital going, but prayer for help was made, and a letter arrived from one who was almost a stranger, a week before the mail was due, saying that, in consequence of a large sum of money having been left to him, the writer wished Mr. Taylor to help him to use it in the Lord's work, and he therefore enclosed a cheque for £50. At that hospital in Ningpo forty-eight of the patients became Christians.

Dr. SANSOM spoke a few words of encouragement, and appreciation of Dr. Howard Taylor's character, after which the chairman wished both Dr. Battersby and Dr. Taylor a hearty God-speed in the name of the meeting.

MAJOR WHITTLE'S MISSIONS.

STRATFORD.

MAJOR WHITTLE'S mission at Stratford, E., which closed last week, was fruitful in a high degree. One of the meetings afforded occasion for a special appeal to infidels, and a number of men whose sympathy lay in the direction of atheism attended. They listened respectfully to the Major as he spoke of Christ as a witness for the truth. Afterwards they put some questions, which were readily answered. To interrogate such a capable evangelist meant the assertion of all available courage on the part of the unbelievers, who, nevertheless, were answered fully, and with great kindness of manner. The difficulties presented were more imaginary than real. Christ said, urged one infidel, that some of his disciples should not "taste of death" until they saw the Son of Man "coming in his kingdom." Major Whittle showed from the Gospels that the transfiguration scene, which typified the coming kingdom, was the fulfilment of Christ's word, and was so regarded by Peter in his second Epistle.

Among the audiences at the meetings were many men from the railway works. When testimony was called for they were not behind in speaking what they knew. Several of them owed their enlightenment to the labours of Mr. Moody years ago, some even having been reclaimed from infidelity. The principal infidel objector, in the course of conversation, allowed that the cutting off of an arm or other limb did not destroy personal identity; but, he asked, "if you cut off a man's head, what then? Is he still a living being"? The Major's answer was to the point: "John saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus" (Rev. xx. 4). He also referred to the condition of the wicked rich man in Christ's discourse in Luke xvi. The Major had a quiet and serious talk with the questioner, and, it is fully believed, left him under conviction of sin and of judgment to come.

The proceedings had an enhanced local interest, owing to the attendance of this infidel. The man's mother was a Christian, whose peace in death was great as her friends around her bed sang "Rock of Ages." Even in his weary wanderings the poor man finds a tranquilising charm in Toplady's famous lines. We join our Stratford friends in prayer that light may speedily dawn upon all such, and that they may find in Christ a solution of every intellectual difficulty, as well as a source of unspeakable joy and gladness.

NORWOOD.

On Sunday evening a week's mission was begun by the evangelist at Auckland Hall, West Norwood, where a Mission is carried on under the fostering care of Mr. T. H. Stoughton. Although it was the initial meeting, there were not a few indications of fruitfulness at its close. Major Whittle delivered an intensely earnest Gospel message, giving the hearers line upon line, and precept upon precept, in his ardent desire to lead them into the clear light of conscious acceptance with God, through Jesus Christ. The mission will continue throughout the week, and will close on Sunday evening. Major Whittle will preach in Chatsworth-road Church on Sunday morning, and conduct a service for children in the same place in the afternoon.

DR. BARNARDO AND ROMAN CATHOLICS:

A CONSPIRACY UNMASKED.

It is matter for hearty congratulation that the action of the Roman Catholics in harassing Dr. Barnardo, in his work for Christ and humanity, has led to an accession of Christian support to the Homes with which his name is associated. Not for the first time has Rome over-reached herself in her proselytising tyranny; the result, this time, has been an awakening, among the friends of evangelical religion, to a sense of the urgency of the need for the conservation of the pure faith of Christ. It is on the broad lines of Christianity, as distinct from sectarian preferences, that Dr. Barnardo's institutions have been conducted from the first; hence the hostility of that Church which knows no toleration, except of her own decrees and dogmas. This hostility is directed against liberty and truth, and it is high time the fact were realised by those who fear God and would serve Him in all good conscience. If any proof were required of the deep and widespread sympathy with Dr. Barnardo in the persecution which he has of late suffered at the hands of Roman Catholics, it was afforded on Tuesday evening last week, when Exeter Hall was crowded with friends of evangelical effort among the children of the streets. The object of the meeting was first to express confidence in the work done by Dr. Barnardo's Homes; and, secondly, to express a conviction that the law ought to be modified, so as to protect children from the evil life and influence of cruel and immoral parents.

Many influential gentlemen supported Sir S. A. Blackwood, K.C.B., who occupied the chair. Among them were:—Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P., Messrs. Sydney Gedge, M.P., W. S. Caine, M.P., and H. Seton-Karr, M.P.; Canons Girdlestone and Fleming, Bishop H. O. Meyers, Hon. and Rev. W. Talbot Rice; Generals Noble and Watson; Mr. W. Miller, Q.C.; Rev. Drs. Donald Macleod, W. Tyler, and E. W. Bullinger; Colonel Scott; Major Frobisher; Revs. A. Mursell, Styleman Herring, Nevile Sherbrooke, Evan Hopkins, Richard Roberts, E. Husband, W. H. Langhorne, and J. H. Scott; Drs. J. E. Cranage, W. H. Perkin, F.R.S., and A. Butler Stoney; Messrs. R. Paton, R. C. Morgan, B. Broomhall, Donald Matheson, Hugh M. Matheson, J. E. Mathieson, J. Sherrard, A. H. Campbell, J. Shrimpton, G. L. Dashwood, G. W. Campbell, E. W. Thomas, Courthope Todd, C. Russell Hurditch; Hon. Maud Kinnaird, Miss Macpherson, Miss Steer, and Miss Mason. "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" having been heartily sung, and prayer offered by Rev. H. Nevile Sherbrooke, letters and telegrams of apology were read from a large number of friends. Mr. Spurgeon, who is at Mentone, sent hearty sympathy and £5 towards the expenses. Rev. E. M. Townshend, chaplain of the Homes, read communications, regretting absence, from Sir H. J. Selwyn-Ibbetson, Bart., M.P., the Earl of Suffolk and Berkshire, Lord Robert Montagu, the Earl of Gosford, Dowager Countess Cairns, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., Mr. T. A. Denny; Revs. John McNeill, J. T. Wigner, Hugh Price Hughes, Mark Guy Pearse, Chas. Bullock, H. C. G. Moule, H. W. Webb-Peploe, Newman Hall, J. Jackson Wray, W. Cuff, D. B. Hankin; Drs. J. Thain Davidson, Donald Fraser, D. McEwan, L. B. White, J. Hiles Hitchens; Mr. W. Fowler, Col. Howard Vincent; Messrs. J. Rankin, M.P., E. S. Norris, M.P., Reginald Radcliffe, Wilbraham Taylor, B. S. Clarke, F. F. Belsey; Revs. Burman Cassin, Peter Thompson, J. de Kewer Williams, J. F. Porter, and J. Bond; Dr. H. Soltau, Messrs. Henry Edwards and George Holland, and many others. Over three hundred clergymen had written letters expressing confidence in Dr. Barnardo and his work, but only selections of the large correspondence could be read. If one idea can characterise these communications, it was that of warm sympathy, frequently emphasised by promises of support. Noblemen, Members of Parliament, ministers of religion, and Christian philanthropists combined to speak in terms of high appreciation of the work, and esteem for its founder.

SIR S. A. BLACKWOOD

delivered an opening address which was at once serious and stimulating in tone. Having sketched the important work in which Dr. Barnardo has been engaged during twenty-three years—seeking, rescuing, feeding, clothing, housing, educating, and training stray and gutter children, and sending them out as decent members of society—he said: Impressed with the singleness of aim and the wisdom of the arrangements, strong and unwavering support has been rendered by all evangelical sections of the Christian Church; men like Samuel Morley on the one hand, and Lord Chancellor Cairns on the other, having shown their sympathy, and displayed their lively interest in the enterprise.

The benefits which have accrued to the children themselves, and to the community at large, cannot be estimated. Brought out of vicious, depraved, immoral, disgusting surroundings—sought out and found in the cellars and attics, in the wharves, and almost in the very drains of the City, under railway arches and on doorsteps—children have been received into the Homes, whose boast it is that their doors are never closed to any destitute applicant. Many of the children have, after training, been sent to Canada, where all sections of the community have testified to their great usefulness and value; in fact, parties which have been despatched year by year have actually been spoken for in advance. From the letters of the boys and girls themselves we know what happy homes they have in the new country. Up to the present no fewer than 14,500 children have been admitted into the Homes, which, from small beginnings, have grown in number and capacity until now they accommodate 3000 inmates. As many as 4000 children have been placed in the colonies, and the associated institutions number thirty-eight in all. To this let the fact be added that in 1888 the confidence of the Christian public in the Homes and other excellent agencies was shown by support, in freewill offerings, to the extent of £90,000.

How has this been accomplished? First of all, by the good hand of our God upon us in answer to prayer. And then, as we shall all acknowledge, it is due to the compassionate zeal, untiring energy, and patient labours, through evil report and good report, of Dr. Barnardo. (The meeting loudly cheered this statement, and a reference by the Chairman to the self-denial and devotion of the many helpers in the cause elicited from Dr. Barnardo a hearty "hear, hear.") At the present moment, continued the speaker, this grand Christian work is SERIOUSLY IN DANGER.

The propriety, nay, the legality, of certain acts of the Director, in connection with proceedings lately before the Law Courts, has been questioned, and judicial strictures have been taken up, expanded, and emphasised, by some of the daily newspapers of London. The Director has been charged with being utterly unfit to be entrusted with the care of children, and this is not only serious for him, but also for all who are associated with him, officially, nominally, or actively. It is also serious for the three thousand children under his care, and for such destitute children as, ere long, may be seeking admission to the Homes. This work depends upon confidence, and if that confidence is endangered the supplies which have hitherto flowed in from every quarter will certainly be checked. We cannot contemplate the result without alarm and even dismay.

Disclaiming any intention or desire to animadvert upon judicial utterances, the Chairman said he saw no cause to complain of the press calling upon a public man like Dr. Barnardo to explain his conduct. To give explanations, so as to reassure all whose confidence might have begun to waver was, in fact, the prime object of the meeting.

In some concluding remarks, Sir Arthur Blackwood said that, as one of the vice-presidents of the Homes, he had felt it his duty to attend and express unabated confidence in Dr. Barnardo. There are, he said, those who would debar a civil servant of the Crown from expressing his religious convictions upon matters of paramount interest and importance to the community and to himself. It has been already announced by the leading Roman Catholic newspaper, The Tablet, that attacks will be made upon me, immediately the House of Commons meets, for my "indecent conduct" in venturing to preside at this meeting.

This sidelight upon Rome's temper and tactics aroused the indignation of the assembly to a degree which found expression in cries of "Shame," and repeated hisses. Sir Arthur proceeded: It is alleged that, as permanent head of the largest Civil department of the State, with more than one hundred thousand people under his authority—subordinate, of course, to the authority of the Postmaster-General—it is indecorous and wrong of me, on every ground, to take part in a public meeting of this kind, and that it evidences my unfitness to occupy the place I hold, and to deal impartially with the Roman Catholic servants of the Crown who may be serving under my orders. Roman Catholic members of Parliament have distinctly announced their intention of taking up that position.

WELL, IT MATTERS LITTLE TO ME.

You will allow me to say, in anticipation of such attacks, that during the ten years that I have had the honour to occupy my post under the Crown, no one has ever charged me with having allowed my deep—extremely deep—religious convictions to interfere for one moment with the discharge of my duties to the State, or to influence me in dealing impartially with any man whose religious convictions might happen to differ from my own. But I would be untrue to my convictions if I absented myself from this evening's proceedings, or hesitated to stand by my friend in his time of trial.

These statements were loudly cheered.

CONFIDENCE IN DR. BARNARDO.

Sir R. N. FOWLER, Bart., M.P., moved a resolution expressing unabated confidence in the management and work of the Homes, and sympathy with Dr. Barnardo in his resistance to the efforts of those who would remove from his care, on the ground of religion, children who, having been neglected and uncared for until rescued by the institutions, are now being brought up in the fear, nurture, and admonition of the Lord. Sir Robert esteemed it a high honour to stand by the good work of these Homes in the present time of trial.

Mr. HUGH M. MATHESON, in seconding, remarked that such work had never been ntirely free from difficulties. He rejoiced, owever, that Dr. Barnardo was not the man o be discouraged. When Dr. Guthrie undertook to deal with the street arabs of Edinburgh, he had to encounter precisely similar obstacles. He said: "I claim the right to educate a child that I take from the street. I feed, I clothe, I house, and, of course, I educate him. I stand up for my right to teach that child what I believe to be God's truth, and I protest against the right of any man to step in and say I shall not teach the child this way, but that way." He further said: "When I clothe, feed, and educate a child, I stand to it in the place of parent, and whatever others may think, I feel that the soul of that child will be required at my hands."

Rev. ARTHUR MURSELL said: "God bless Dr. Barnardo, and defend him in the midst of his trial!" A very serious blow, he held, is now being struck at the vitals of practical philanthropy, unless an alteration is effected in the law so as to prevent the repetition of such attacks. He had seen in Canada the sweet and pure and holy life and surroundings of many who had been in the Homes; no one, however, could look over the high walls and see into the places in which some people would have them immured.

Rev. EDWARD HUSBAND, of Folkestone, also spoke. He told how it came about that the boy Gossage was admitted into the Homes. Having been found in the middle of the night, ragged and miserable, leaning against a lamp-post, he was lodged in the police cell, and on the following day remanded to the workhouse. This magisterial order greatly grieved the little fellow. At that stage, continued Mr. Husband, I heard of the case, and I said at once, "Dr. Barnardo is my man!" I wrote at once, and had an immediate reply, I think it was a telegram, saying, "Send up the boy at once; we will meet him at the station." Some Roman Catholics have since been harassing Dr. Barnardo in regard to this lad, on what ground I know not; but this I know, that one of their fundamental doctrines is summed up in the word "proselytism"; they compass land and sea to make a proselyte. I also know this, that whenever a Roman Catholic chapel is opened in a town or village, it is the source of a stream of discord; breaking up once happy homes, setting father against mother, parent against child, and friend against friend. I trust Dr. Barnardo will take no unnecessary notice of such things. God bless him! Let him not be afraid of those who plot against him, but let him go on, and the men and women of Christian England will stand by him.

Canon FLEMING asked what would become of homeless children if there were no such institutions as those of Dr. Barnardo. He had inspected the work, and sent friendless children to the Homes. He held it to be a blessing that God raises up such men, and puts it into the hearts of others to help them to keep a door always open to receive the outcast and neglected. Speaking of the work done from a material point of view, the Canon asked how many thousands of pounds had been saved to the State by Homes which rescue such as are drifting down into the criminal classes. Moreover, no small part of our social happiness and safety is owing to the beneficial operations of such institutions. Above all, Dr. Barnardo is doing a saving work, following in the footsteps of Him who said, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which is lost."

The resolution was carried unanimously and with acclamation. On rising to speak, received an ovation which testified strongly to the high esteem in which he is held. In a word, his speech laid bare a Roman Catholic conspiracy directed against his Homes. Without any bitterness of tone or needless allusions of a personal character, he vindicated his action in matters of public notoriety, and drove home the impression that nothing less than the caution and vigilance he has displayed would have met and matched the underhand tactics and practices of agents of the Church of Rome. It was necessary that he should make some reference to the recent litigation, in order to explain his position. He studiously guarded himself, however, from making reflections upon the judges and their decisions. Also, he avoided bitterness or uncharitableness in his references to Roman Catholics in general.

For twenty-three years, said the Doctor, God has permitted me, and those co-operating with me, to carry on this work of rescuing, and it is remarkable that during that entire period we have never heard of proselytism until last year. Have we changed the character of our work, or have our principles of action undergone alteration? Certainly not! We have done what we did at the first, and what by God's help we mean always to do—we have admitted applicants to any of our institutions without regard to creed or denominational belief. Without regard to age, sex, physical disability, or belief, we admit all who are absolutely destitute. In the latter part of 1888 we were charged with proselytism. I shall prove up to the hilt that there is no truth in the charge, and, moreover, that there is, on the other hand, a combination, which I have called a conspiracy, to remove children from the care of our institutions.

A very large proportion of the destitute children of London, and of other big cities as well, have Roman Catholic relatives. I am not here to say why this is, but it is a fact; proportionate to the adult Roman Catholic population, there is a larger number of destitute children among them than among the other sections of the population. To a considerable extent, this arises from mixed marriages, which are very frequent. Rome claims that every child of such marriages

BELONGS TO HER.

The law says that the child shall be brought up in the religion of its father. Rome's claims are therefore against the law of the land. Only this week, I have received from a Roman Catholic priest whom I highly respect, and who is respected by everyone who knows him, a letter in which he says: "Do you not know that no Roman Catholic gets permission to marry a Protestant until he or she has pledged his or her word that the children shall be brought up Roman Catholics?" Here then is the whole Church of Rome laying itself out to frustrate the provisions of the law of England. It not unfrequently happens that Roman Catholic mothers have their children baptized unknown to their husbands; and on the death of the fathers, the children are claimed by Rome. For a number of years I experienced much difficulty through these mixed marriages. A woman would come to us with a child, and urge us to admit it. The usual investigation would take place; we satisfy ourselves that the woman is destitute, and find out also that she is a Roman Catholic. I have, in numberless cases, had to tell such women that the Homes are Protestant, for although we admit all sorts of applicants, we think it right to say that the religious belief of those who carry on the work is Protestant. We say, "Your child will be brought up as a Protestant. Why do not you take it to a Roman Catholic Home?" The reply given, often with tears, is, "I have asked the priest—gone to Father So-and-so—but he says he cannot help me."

I have a case before me now. A little girl, the daughter of a woman of abominable life, was brought to me by her mother, who was far gone in consumption. I took in the child, but tried in vain to get the woman from her sinful life. We had the little girl in our Home about nine months. One day another woman from the same lodging-house came and said, "Mrs. So-and-so is dying. She is in awful trouble. The priest has come, and says he will not give her the last offices—the benefit of the last blessing of the Church—unless her child, now in your Homes, is taken out." (Cries of "Shame!") It was a terrible thought to me that the poor sinful woman should end her life unhappily. I had, of course, no kind of belief in what the priest could do, though I knew that the Son of God was willing to receive the woman. What could I do? The woman lay on a sick-bed, and, as the other woman said, "It is terrible to listen to her cries since the priest left her with that she will be damned." I said to this woman, "Suppose I let the child go; I cannot let it go to remain in the lodging-house." "Oh," rejoined the woman, "a lady has interested herself in the matter, and promised to find a Roman Catholic Home for the child." Some will, doubtless, blame me; but, with the face of the dying woman before my eyes, and her cries haunting me, I let the child go.

Now this kind of thing was repeated very often, until, in 1887, I think, as many Roman Catholic boys were coming to me, I thought it high time to stir up the Church of Rome to do something. I then wrote to the Secretary of the Cardinal Archbishop, and put before him the case of this very child, adding that our rules forbid us to give up children once received into the Homes. Why do not you, I asked, begin at the beginning, and take in these children at the outset of their need? I told him that the Roman Catholics had no agent at work seeking out the children; and I say now that I have never met, in common lodging-house or brothel, or the other haunts of the most miserable of the poor of London, anyone trying to gather destitute Roman Catholic children. I have heard that there is a priest doing so in North London and one in South London; but none of my agents, who are continually on the search, have ever met either of them.

I urged the Cardinal to begin the work of rescue, and said I would go a long way to facilitate operations. I promised that, on Roman Catholic children applying to me, if he was prepared to receive them, I would send them to him, on certain conditions. These conditions were: First, if he did not receive them, he would send them back to me, not to the streets; second, that he took care that no child was warned privately not to come to me. Moreover, I insisted that I could not dismiss a child once received into the institutions, and there must be no more claim for that. The Cardinal Archbishop established a Home in East London, and I began to send him such children as came to my doors saying they were Roman Catholics.

Now, while this was going on, someone found a bundle of papers in the street, and sent them to me. They issued from the Westminster Diocesan Educational Fund, under Cardinal Manning's auspices, and contained the names of boys and girls in various institutions, who were to be the subject of inquiry. The names were given, several of them being in our Homes. This was at the very time of our negotiations, and when an honourable observance of conditions was fully understood. I charged the Roman Catholics with breach of faith, and said that if these actions were proceeded with I should break off all negotiations. They proceeded with two cases, which proved to get possession of our children. First, the mother of one of the boys whose name appeared on the paper, was said to be desirous of having her child. It so happened that that mother wrote to her son a letter which subsequently came into my hands. Did she want him? No; but "Father Scrimskue had been to see her about taking him away." She continued, "Let me know if they have said anything to you about it, for I do not know what to do—whether Dr. Barnardo will give you up." In that particular case, the mother was a Roman Catholic, but the father was a Protestant, or had been before he died. I was able to send that child away, so that he could not be got at. He is now doing very well. I did not break the law, but did what I could to shelter the child from being injuriously influenced.

Another case was that of three children, and it completely proves the charge of conspiracy. A poor woman lay ill in St. Giles; and she had three children of tender age. We admitted a boy and a girl in July, 1885. The poor woman continued very ill, but she visited her children, and was so satisfied with their condition that she begged me to admit her youngest child, a little girl. We took her in, in October the same year, and a few days later the poor woman died. Her husband had deserted her after treating her with unspeakable cruelty; his brutality has been deposed to before a judge in chambers. Many efforts were made to get these children from under our care. The doctor who attended her has deposed that the priest had been demanding that the children should be "removed from the care of Dr. Barnardo," which proposal the dying woman stoutly resisted. Further, we have it on the affidavit of a lady, a Jewess, and wholly unbiassed, that while an in-patient of the Brompton Hospital, the poor woman expressed gratitude to her for having helped to get the children into Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

A year and a half after the woman died, the father, who had deserted the family, and whose prolonged unkindness had accelerated his wife's death, turned up, and we received

A LAWYER'S LETTER.

The dear man was so anxious about the religious welfare of the children! He did not provide them with bread and butter, but he was very desirous that they should go to heaven; therefore, he wanted them handed over to a priest. We resisted the demand, and I went before Mr. Justice Charles, sitting in chambers, who said, "It is absurd for a man who has neglected the common duty of a parent, to talk now of their religious welfare." Mr. Justice Charles looked at the children, and said: "I shall not remove them from Dr. Barnardo's care." The case was adjourned, and we appeared before Mr. Justice Day. (A voice, "He's a Catholic.") We proved six convictions against the father, but Mr. Justice Day, who, no doubt, gave utterance to the law of the land, said: "The father has a right to direct the religious welfare of the children, and I shall order that the children be handed over at once."

I was baffled; I dare not resist the law: though, under the circumstances, I would have done if I could. I had behind me the sacred wishes of the dying mother, who had committed these children to my care, and had resisted the proposals of the priest. Some ladies were in Court who loved the children, and had had them with them for a long time. They wanted to have five minutes with them, but the solicitor said that could not be allowed without his being present. I then asked Mr. Justice Day to let the ladies have three or four minutes in a Court corridor, but he said, "Certainly not, unless the solicitor to the other side wishes." On this I say that where religious feeling is strong, you must expect even judges, who are but men, to show their leaning. There was not in this case the slightest suggestion that either mother or father desired the children, but there was a sustained effort on the part of the religious community to which one of them belonged, to lay hold of the children. To this end they used the nominal authority of the father, and they succeeded. The papers which were found showed moreover that, before the legal proceedings, forces were at work to compel parents to do what otherwise they would not have thought of. If this is not conspiracy, then I do not know what any combination to accomplish a given purpose can possibly mean.

THE BOY GOSSAGE,

as you have heard, was found in the street at Folkestone, and we took him in. I received the boy under the authority of the words of Jesus, "Suffer little children to come unto Me." He told me that his mother had twice deserted him, and eventually sold him to two organ grinders. The statement that the boy was sold has been denied. I hold in my hand an affidavit signed by the master of the workhouse at Leamington, who says: "The said infant told me that his mother had sold him at Leamington to some organ grinders who tramped from place to place."

How is it that Mrs. Gossage, who has cared nothing for her child, has now awakened to a sense of his religious interest? It is not she at all who seeks him! I declare emphatically that the mother never expressed a desire for him, but some Roman Catholics got at her, and influenced her, and urged her to claim her boy. I have here an affidavit, dated Nov. 29 this year, in which the matron of the workhouse at Leamington says: "On or about Nov. 10, the said Mary Ford, otherwise Gossage, informed me that she intended to apply for the admission of her last infant to a Home in London. I asked her if she meant Dr. Barnardo's Home, and she said: 'Yes, where my other boy is. He will be better looked after there than I can do for him.'" Thus this woman, so desirous to have her child that she begins a legal process in London for his recovery, says some months afterwards that she is going to send her other child to be where her first is, and very well off! This, however, is not all; for I have a letter here. I wrote and asked Mrs. Gossage whether she would like her boy to be here. She replied, under date Sept. 29: "I shall be very pleased if you will keep my son, Harry Gossage, as I cannot afford to keep him myself." She gave a reason why she wished me to keep him in the Homes, saying, "He has two brothers in Canada." From the whole letter I gather this: First, that she was willing that the child should be in our care; and, second, that she would not be unwilling for him to follow his brothers to Canada.

My course with regard to this boy has been severely criticised. First of all, it is said that, however good my motives may be, I have parted with the child too easily. I handed him over to a man of God, a servant of Christ, Mr. Wm. Norton, who brought me letters of introduction on which I could thoroughly rely. It is asked, "Why did I not get his name and address?" I answer, "I had a reason for not doing so"; and if the learned judge knew the facts, he would not have charged me with anything unworthy of a Christian man. I purposely did not obtain particulars of the residence of Mr. Norton, in order that the boy, who is to be adopted into his family, might not be disturbed by

HIS ABOMINABLE RELATIVES.

History has proved that this course was not so prudent as another course would have been. However, I took it openly and deliberately; I avowed my act, and stand prepared to abide by the consequences.

I am blamed for committing the boy to Mr. Norton, whom I personally conversed with, and who brought me letters of recommendation; but I am still more blamed that I did not hand him over to Mr. Newdigate, whom I have never seen, and who sent me no letters of recommendation at all. I did not believe he was authorised to get the boy out of the Home, and I do not believe it now. It is further said that my measures were misleading. When Mr. Newdigate's letter came before me, I said: "This man presents no authorisation; he is some busybody; I'll give him no information at all." I did not reply to him. He wrote again, but sent no authorisation; and not until judgment was given in the case, did I think it possible that a man could enforce a claim which was supported by no written authorisation from the parent to whom the child might belong. (Having read a cutting from a newspaper of the preceding day, showing that a London magistrate had, with good reason, held that written authorisation must be demanded in such cases, Dr. Barnardo said) I did not feel that the mother had really asked for the child; I gave no information; and when proceedings took a more definite shape, the child was gone. The first week in January this year, they wrote me with the authority of the mother to give up the child, and I replied at once: "The child has been sent by me out of the kingdom, and I cannot do as you desire." Our part in the Gossage case is not so altogether divested of common sense as some would have you believe. If the religious element were not behind it, you would never have heard the of bitter strictures that have been pronounced against me.

A NEEDED CHANGE IN THE LAW.

Mr. SYDNEY GEDGE, M.P., moved a resolution in favour of a change in the law relating to the custody of the children of cruel, profligate, or immoral parents; so that voluntary institutions and private individuals, actuated by benevolent motives, may have conferred upon them powers similar to those entrusted to Boards of Guardians by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1889, and by certain clauses in the Act for the better prevention of cruelty to children. At present the desired powers can be enforced when children have become inmates of workhouses; but in proportion as it is preferable that they should be received into such institutions as Dr. Barnardo's, so is it desirable that similar powers, with the needful safeguards, should be entrusted to benevolent persons.

Mr. W. S. CAINE, M.P., seconded the motion in a few cordial words. After a brief speech in support, by Canon GIRDLESTONE, the resolution was carried unanimously. It was further decided to send copies of it to the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition in Parliament, and other distinguished statesmen.

FURTHER EXPLANATIONS.

Dr. Barnardo's address occupied three-quarters of an hour in the delivery. In a special issue of Night and Day, now in course of printing, of which we have seen proof sheets, Dr. Barnardo says that he had noted for consideration several points which, owing to exigencies of time, he had to omit from his speech. One of these was an explanation of his treatment of Mr. Newdigate, of Leamington, the Roman Catholic who is endeavouring to get at the boy Gossage.

The Lord Chief Justice remarked upon the religious phraseology of the letter which was sent to Mr. Newdigate in acknowledgment of his gift of 10s. towards the Homes. On this Dr. Barnardo says:—"The months of November, December, and January are the busiest of the year with me. During these months the largest part of our income is received. I take it that, as a rule, those who write and send me money are persons in sympathy with our work; indeed, this is mostly so. It is impossible to write to each individually, and yet gifts and letters must be acknowledged, and promptly, too. Therefore, during these busy times, I arrange for each fortnight a special form of letter, which meets the case of most of my donors; and, believing as I do in the Christian interest of most of my correspondents, I conclude my letter by asking for continued 'prayerful interest and sympathy.' The Lord Chief Justice spoke of making a cloak of religion, because these words concluded the formal letter with which Mr. Newdigate's gift was acknowledged. Then the judge said, in condemning my action: 'What! Did not Dr. Barnardo know at that very time when he was sending the boy away, that his mother had applied to have him restored?' I quote from memory. My answer is: 'Certainly not; I did not know anything of the kind.' I saw Mr. Norton on November 10, 1888, before any communication reached the office purporting to come from the mother of the boy. At that interview I practically arranged to send the boy away. I left town on the evening of November 10, and did not return until the afternoon of the 15th. At that season of the year correspondence is very heavy. All letters not marked 'private' are opened by one of my helpers, and our rule is for all monetary gifts to be acknowledged on the day of receipt. Mr. Newdigate's first letter, purporting to convey the mother's demand, and containing 10s., reached the office on November 12, in my absence. The money was acknowledged by the lithographed form referred to, and no allusion was made to that part of the letter which referred to the boy. Now let me explain our procedure. The letters which are kept over for me while I am away are divided into three classes. First, there are those marked 'private,' which are never opened except by myself. Second, there are those which are not marked 'private,' but which deal with matters requiring my personal attention. These also are kept over. Third, there are those which can be partially dealt with, but which require fuller replies, which I only can give. When I am away for a few days the pile of letters in these three divisions is enormous. On returning to the office on Nov. 15, my first work would be to attend to the unopened letters; then I would deal with the second class; while the third would be kept over to be attended to more at convenience. My belief is that Mr. Newdigate's letter, being in the third division, was not seen by me before November 19 or 20. The child left me on the 16th, and was already on his way to Canada when I first became aware of the unauthorised demand for his removal to a Roman Catholic Institution. Then, as Mr. Newdigate sent no authorisation, I sent him no reply."

EMIGRATION FOR WOMEN.

THE United British Women's Emigration Association began its work in 1884, and has assisted over one thousand women to the Colonies and to the States. Its special object is the selection of women of good character and capacity, their proper protection during the voyage, their careful reception on landing, and their remunerative employment.

By the influence of this Association great improvements have been effected in the accommodation for female emigrants on board ship. Protected parties are sent out in separate quarters. It has opened an Emigrants' Rest at 958, Colquitt-street, Liverpool, to receive and board women assembling there to embark for Canada and the States. It further arranges for the safe emigration of orphans and deserted children. It also promotes and carries out the transmission of men and families.

Women cannot travel in safety to the prosperity which awaits them in the Colonies without this elaborate and careful provision. This cannot be done without money, and, although there are no office expenses, and the whole work is carried out by unpaid volunteers, the present subscriptions are totally inadequate. JANE STUART WORTLEY, President.
ELLEN JOYCE, Vice-President.

PRESIDENT HARRISON, U.S.A., AND ARBITRATION.—Mr. William Jones, late secretary of the English Peace Society (47, New Broad-street, E.C.), has had two interviews with the President of the United States at Washington, with the object of urging upon the American Government the expediency of initiating a permanent treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, providing for this peaceful mode of settling all future disputes between the two nations. Mr. Harrison expressed a hope that the Pan-American Congress now sitting at Washington may make some progress in the direction of facilitating future references to arbitration amongst all American nations at least. He guarded himself from expressing any definite opinion in reference to a treaty with Great Britain, whilst, however, acknowledging that, personally, he might be reckoned amongst the cordial partisans of peace and arbitration.

CHILDREN IN IRELAND.

GOSPEL work among the young has long been carried on in Dublin and suburbs, but until lately it has been practically unknown in other parts of the island. This year, however, an advance has been made by the formation of a Children's Special Service Mission for Ireland, on the lines of the English Mission. Services have been conducted at Arklow, Enniscorthy, Roscrea, Kilkee, Greystones, and Portrush. These efforts have been accompanied by blessing, and on the whole have been very encouraging; more particularly those in Portrush, where the meetings were held on the beach.

Next year we hope the work of the Mission will be further extended, and we look for the prayers and practical sympathy of all interested in the spiritual welfare of Irish children.

CHRISTMAS CRIES AND CHRISTMAS CHEER.

OUT of a number of cases sketched by the Mildmay Deaconesses—who, from year to year, regularly search out and visit the needy—we select the following as illustrative of "the poor," who plead to-day for our pity and our help. They all live in the streets and lanes of the Great City—some in attics, some in cellars, all in close rooms. They are shut away not merely from the "green spots" which cheer their country neighbours, but from the charities and courtesies of the rich; for they congregate in parts where all are alike poor. Thousands of homes may be found in the East-end and in South London in which all the families lodge in tenements, where life, with few exceptions even in summer days, is a constant struggle to keep body and soul together, and where the chills of winter must necessarily make them "ready to perish."

"MY CUP OF TEA TO-DAY."

Such a sweet pensive face, such clear blue eyes, such a decrepit old woman! How does she live? By taking in an old lodger like herself, by mending some stockings (a most rare accomplishment in Bethnal Green), by receiving a little parish relief and by a little occasional help from the Mission. "You see," says she, "He sends me my cup of tea to-day—to-morrow, if He calls me, I am ready; this poor, helpless body will be no more good down here." One longs to lighten and brighten the lot of those who have such a struggle to preserve life. So many such we meet.

"ONLY A FARTHING EARNED."

The father of a large family is in consumption, and has been unable to work for some weeks past. The other afternoon, when his wife, who is a flower maker, had gone to the hospital to fetch his medicine, he, anxious to make up for the loss of her time, took up her work and busied himself over it all the afternoon. On her return his disappointment was great, when he found he had only earned a farthing! This single incident will serve to show something of the struggle which they were making to keep the home together. The only steady income is brought in by the eldest boy, which does not quite cover the rent.

NO BREAKFAST FOR THE CHILDREN.

But, alas! as the well-known ballad says, "It is harder still to have no work to do," and this is the cry of many a poor breadwinner. We look into the home of one such, and what do we find?

"What ails your little ones?" I asked of the mother, as they came in at 4 p.m. from school, "are they ill?" "No, ma'am," she replied, "only faint-like. They have had no food to-day. I had to send them to school without—had no bread to give them." She is a respectable, quiet woman, with seven children to care for, and her husband out of work.

THE CHILD AND THE HALF-PENNY LOAF.

"Mother," said a little hungry child, "I know where you can get a half-penny loaf." "What good is that," said her mother, "when we haven't the half-penny to buy it with?" It was a sad story: the husband, a gilder's preparer, worn out with walking about in vain efforts to get work, and the children crying for bread, the bed-clothes gone, the boots gone, and hope all but dead.

Oh, mothers, who have little ones well clad, well covered in their pretty cots these chilly nights, think of those children in miserable homes who fare so very differently; think of a mother's heart-ache when she cannot even give the needful food to little hungry mouths; and stretch out a loving hand of sympathy towards them.

"WHEN PATIENCE IS PERFECTED."

A poor man, with a wife and two little children, has suffered much by want of employment. He is an earnest Christian and total abstainer: day after day, after making a few articles of his trade, he goes from shop and shop to get them sold; often, alas, without success. He never asks help. "I trust the living God, miss," he says, "and when patience is perfected in me, He will send prosperity." His trust never falters, though I found the other day that the family had nothing to eat.

INQUIRER'S COLUMN.

THE OLD TESTAMENT SAINTS.

DEAR SIR,—At a recent small conference on the "Coming of the Lord for his Church," the question was brought forward as to whether the Old Testament Saints, inclusive even of John Baptist, will form part of the 'Church," "Bride," &c. Or does the "Church," &c., consist solely of those who have believed since the death of our Lord? and are all who "died in faith" before that considered only as friends of the Bridegroom? F. W.

[The plain teaching of Scripture is to be preferred before inferences founded on dispensational theories. In Gal. iv. 1—7, the Apostle Paul, using the figure of a person, speaks of the Church in two stages—under-age or before Christ, and of full age on Christ's advent. In Heb. xi. also, we read that the faith whereby we are saved has from the first been the essential condition of acceptance with God. Moreover, as the condition of salvation before and after Christ is described in identical terms, so, also, a union in glory is spoken of thus: "And these all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (39, 40). The Old Testament saints have certainly no secondary place in God's plan; if they had, our Lord would not have spoken of the glorified believers as 'sitting down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven." Differences of time and country cannot entail spiritual and eternal distinctions in regard to such as serve the one unchanging God in their only day of opportunity. Abraham and his spiritual seed, under the law and the prophets, saw in every Divine manifestation a guarantee of the coming Incarnation of God; we, in our turn, should likewise discern in every manifestation of God's Holy Spirit a proof of the Incarnation accomplished once for all. Not only is Abraham "the father of all them that believe"; but eternity will show that "they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham" (Gal. iii. 9).—ED.]

ORPHANS IN PARIS.—In the spring of 1888, with the kind help of a few Christian friends, an Orphan Home was opened in Paris. Last winter ten children were received, some temporarily, others permanently. It was thought well to make the work, at least to a certain extent, self-supporting. In order to do so, a house was opened by Miss Christie, 54, Rue Violet, Paris. The plan has been peculiarly blessed, seventy-four visitors have been received. The total paid for board up to the end of November amounts to a little over £280, and the subscriptions come to about £94. Now the house is furnished and free of debt, but the vacant rooms are waiting new occupants. Help in one form or other will be necessary to carry on and increase the work.

Dr. Pentecost in Dundee.

THE THIRD WEEK.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

I AM glad to report that there has been a decided advance all along the line in connection with the special religious meetings now being held in our city. In my last report, I remarked that the mission up to the date of writing, could hardly be called a brilliant success. Perhaps I was judging too much by human standards. It is evident that the Spirit of God was more deeply at work among us than I was aware of. Certainly we have in former years seen more external manifestations of interest than now; but we are beginning to see marked and evident signs that God indeed is present, and mightily at work. One who knows all the ins and outs of both the business and Church world of Dundee, recently said that "for ten years past there has been a steady and increasingly strong ebb-tide of spirituality here." Nearly every evangelist who has visited the city during that time (including Mr. Moody on his second visit), has grieved over the stolid indifference everywhere apparent, and the immovable character of the place. Had Dr. Pentecost closed his mission last week, we should have all sighed over another apparent defeat; but now we can fairly praise God for what He has done, and is still doing.

The week began with four services, on Sunday, all conducted by Dr. Pentecost, and held at 8, 11, 2.15, and 6.30. The early meeting was most enthusiastic, and full of spiritual power. The impulse of that meeting went all over the city. One lady reports that, going to her Bible-class from it, she carried the message to her young women, three of whom there and then gave themselves up to God. Other Christian workers tell of similar results. At half-past two Dr. Pentecost occupied the pulpit of St. Peter's Free Church (McCheyne's). Whether the memories of the past worthies who have stood there before God and preached in the power of the Spirit moved the preacher or not, I cannot tell; but certainly there was unusual power in the service. Every seat in the spacious building was full, and all standing-room occupied. During the sermon the preacher was often in tears, and the hearers were no less tender in their solemn attention. An old attendant said it was like some of William Burns's meetings, fifty years ago.

At night the Kinnaird Hall was packed again with men to listen to an address on "The Reality of Unseen Things." The large after-meeting, to which seven or eight hundred men remained, was most solemn. Between thirty and forty men made confession of their acceptance of Christ. The majority of these came boldly out before all the audience. Among them were several old men, who came bowed and broken down, with tears confessing their sinful and lost condition, and their desire for salvation. It was a glorious night, the like of which has not been seen in Dundee for many a day.

The nightly meetings in the Established Church have developed steadily in solemnity and power. Never in the memory of the writer has the word been listened to with more solemn, tearful, and eager attention. One of our leading ministers said at the close of one of the sermons: "Ah, if we could only have Christ lifted up that way in all our pulpits, and by all of us who are called to preach, there would be no more complaints of barrenness." Said one, of another address: "I never saw the awful terrors of the damned as to-night: sinners going down to the pit with the very tears of God falling upon them—the crucified Son of God standing between every sinner and the pit. What else could come of those who deliberately trample Him under foot to get there? Surely God Himself cannot save a soul that tramples under foot his Son, and counts the blood of the covenant an unholy thing." Another said: "I have never seen the wonders of redemption and the glories of grace so clearly before." The universal testimony is that God has been shining on his Word and making it to shine. It has not been human wisdom or eloquence, but the power of God. The effect of this has been to deepen the solemnity of the meetings, elevate the spiritual life of believers, and fill them with joy. God's presence has also been seen in the conviction and conversion of sinners. Scores have surrendered to Christ this week.

MANY TOUCHING INCIDENTS

might be mentioned. A prominent young lawyer, active in the "religious" life and work of his parish, came forward with tears, saying; "I have long since tried to live a Christian life, but have never been sure of salvation. Now I come to-night to accept Christ, which I fear I have never really done before."

On the Monday night there was an old man present, well known in the city. He was present on Sunday night at the hall, and the evangelist had a long talk with him, but he would not surrender. "No the nicht" was his last word, though he was under deep concern of soul. During the after-address on Monday Dr. Pentecost noticed the old man in the congregation, and, as if moved with compassion for the grey-headed sinner, he said: "I see an old man here to-night to whom I spoke last night in the hall. He was under deep conviction then, but would not surrender. He was resisting the Spirit with all his might. I am glad to see him here to-night. I am glad he did not die in his sins last night. I am glad the Spirit has in mercy not left him. He will not have many more calls, if ever he has another one. Oh, I am glad he is not in hell, as I am glad I am not."

Scarcely had these words fallen from the preacher's lips when the old man sprang to his feet; with difficulty he extricated himself from the pack of people about him, and walked down the middle aisle of the church to where the Doctor was standing, and, reaching out his hand, said, "I surrender to Christ now. I take Him as my Saviour." His confession, in the presence of the whole congregation, deeply moved them. Many others decided for Christ.

The next night the old man was present again. At his side sat his brother, nearly as old as himself, and under deep conviction. The elder brother had hunted him up, and brought him to the meeting. He was the first that night to confess Christ. Other cases are constantly occurring, where the newly saved are going forth telling others what great things God has done for them, and bringing them to Jesus. There is no surer sign of a real work of grace than this. So the nights have gone on this week, each being better than the one before. But this is not all; we are hearing of and it is a question whether the work that has broken out apart from the central meeting will not in the end be the greater. Miss Tyson's meetings are also moving many homes. The converted children are carrying the Gospel to their parents.

The power behind the meetings (humanly speaking) is a little band of Christian men and women, perhaps never more than twenty, who meet half an hour before the service to pray. Dr. Pentecost has always led this meeting himself. These praying ones are in covenant for daily and hourly prayer, both in and out of the closet.

Another sure sign of real revival is that the work is being talked about. Men greet each other on the streets with a word or inquiry about the meetings. The daily press is now taking notice, a thing which they are not apt to do; too often they only regard those features of "religious" news worth reporting which tell of some scandal or controversy.

THE BUSINESS MEN'S MEETINGS.

The most marked, and, I believe, the most important, feature of all is the daily meeting for business men. This was undertaken with many misgivings. One gentleman said: "No Dundee merchant will leave his business in the middle of the day to attend a religious meeting continuously from day to day." Dundee is poor indeed in outstanding and outspoken Christian men. There are few men of position in the city who are known as "out-and-out" Christian men. However, the meetings were undertaken, and at 1.15 on Monday Dr. Pentecost took the platform. Five minutes before there were not a dozen men present, and the worst anticipations were almost confirmed; but the next five minutes brought in three hundred men, among them many of the most prominent business leaders. Would they come again? The next day was market-day, and men would be unusually busy. Thank God! that day brought more than the first; and so it has been ever since: each day has seen a larger meeting than the preceding one. And it is strictly a business men's meeting, almost everyone present being well known either in business or professional life; for the lawyers and doctors have been coming as well. It is a new thing in Dundee. The glory is the Lord's, for no man could of himself have done this.

Dr. Pentecost appears on these occasions in a business suit; what little clerical manner he has (which is the minimum) is dropped, and he goes straight at his subject, in a business like fashion. The addresses are not sentimental in any way, but clear, logical presentations of the great truths which gather about and centre in the person of Christ. It is remarked that the preacher is never so forcible and happy as when addressing men, and God has evidently given him a clear call to address this class of audience. The intense and close attention given to every word is a remarkable witness to the fact that Christianity has not lost its power to interest when it is earnestly presented. A leading man said to-day, as four hundred merchants and manufacturers, lawyers and doctors, poured out of the church, and went hurrying back to their places of business, "When was ever the like of this seen on the Cowgate?" The Cowgate is the business centre of the city.

The subjects treated during the week were: "The Triumphant Minority"; "A Reasonable Proposition"; "Who is He?" "The Great Confession; or, Unconditional Surrender"; "What will you do about it?" The meeting on Friday, by a practically unanimous vote, asked the Doctor to continue his addresses next week. He will do so, having announced three addresses: "A Dangerous Risk"; "A Good Investment"; "Profit and Loss."

Dundee, Dec. 14.

RECKLESS DRIVING was the subject of Dr. Thain Davidson's latest sermon in his church to young men, the text being 2 Kings ix. 20. The theme was turned to good and effective spiritual account in picturing forth the career and end of those who give the rein to appetite, passion, or the promptings of unbelief.

LONDON WESLEYAN MISSION.—A series of important provincial meetings on behalf of the London Mission have been arranged. On Monday great meetings were held in the Colston Hall, Bristol. On Tuesday the deputation visited Cheltenham, and were then to proceed to Cardiff. Similar meetings will be held in the New Year at Middlesbrough, Hull, Newcastle, York, and other great centres. At a meeting of the London Mission Committee, Mr. Price Hughes reported the very successful result of the fourteen days' mission at Princes Hall, and also announced that it had been decided to carry on work amongst cabmen in connection with the West London Mission. The Marchioness of Tavistock, who is greatly interested in this work, has undertaken to defray the costs of this particular branch. Arrangements have also been just completed for work among the policemen of the "C" Division, and a class for their benefit will be opened forthwith at Lincoln House on Friday from six to eight.

The Late WILLIAM GRAY ELMSLIE, D.D.,

Professor of Hebrew Literature, Presbyterian College, London.

DR. ELMSLIE'S life extended to only forty-one years, and he had but recently begun to occupy an outstanding position in the Church of Christ. It is not the publication of any remarkable book or the performance of any striking work that leads us to include him in this series of sketches. Death, as our readers know, has suddenly put its solemn seal on a career which seemed likely to have much development, and has required all who knew him to take account of what he was as a man of God, a preacher of the Gospel, and a teacher of those who aspire to the sacred office.

William Gray Elmslie was born in 1848 at the Free Church Manse, Insch, in Aberdeenshire. The surroundings of his childhood were all strongly evangelical, and at the same time highly intellectual. He owed something, doubtless, to his father, a good preacher and a man of unusual shrewdness; but if you ask that sorrowing father (as the writer did the other day) about the influences affecting his son's early years, he will tell you that he owed, not something, but almost everything to a singularly talented, wise, prayerful mother. It is only three years since Mrs. Elmslie went to be "at home with the Lord" (2 Cor. v. 8, R.V.). One who had the privilege of her intimate acquaintance during the future Professor's boyhood, says:—

> His mother was a very remarkable woman. Her very countenance was highly intellectual, and she was remarkably gifted, but she was at the same time most gentle and womanly. In my student days, and afterwards, when settled as minister in a neighbouring parish, no manse had greater attractions for me, as for many other young men, than that of Insch. There was a sweetness, a geniality, a winsomeness, about Mrs. Elmslie such as cannot be described in words. She could reprove, and did reprove when it seemed needful; but she did so in a way that left no sting. I spent not a few very happy days in the quiet manse, and was much impressed by the force and beauty of her character, the strength of her convictions, and the charity she ever extended to all who differed from her.

Those who knew Dr. Elmslie even slightly will at once recognise the human source of that charm and attraction which all felt, and which did not grow less the longer he was known. Principal Dykes, intimately associated with him for sixteen years, spoke with much pathos of that charm on the day of his burial.

He was always a good and loveable boy, brightening the home, and, though no definite time was known as that of his passing from death unto life, the evidences of a gracious state were clear and growing. When school and college days came, he was always at the head, winning many prizes, making many friends, his bright, eager intellect opening out like a flower to the sun. After studying the learned languages, mathematics, and philosophy, at the University of Aberdeen, and taking the degree of M.A., and the gold medal awarded to the best student of the year, he passed to Edinburgh, and studied theology at the New College there in connection with the Free Church of Scotland. Here his gift of utterance—easy, graceful, full of point—began to display itself; and at the close of the usual period of preparation he was licensed to preach the Gospel.

But even before that period arrived, there took place a striking incident which illustrates what was the most prominent feature of his riper years. While still a student he was asked to preach his first sermon in the parish of Rayne, near his father's. His mother wrote to one who, she knew, would be among the hearers, asking to be told how her boy got on. The text was, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock"; and the character of the sermon may be learned from the lady's answer to Mrs. Elmslie, which took the form, not of an ordinary prose letter, but of the following beautiful verses:—

> He held the lamp of Truth that day
> So low that none could miss the way;
> And yet so high to bring in sight
> That picture fair, "The World's Great Light,"
> That gazing up—the lamp between—
> The hand that held it scarce was seen!
> He held the pitcher, stooping low,
> To lips of little ones below,
> Then raised it to the weary saint,
> And bade him drink—when sick and faint;
> They drank—the pitcher thus between—
> The hand that held it scarce was seen!
> He blew the trumpet, soft and clear,
> That trembling sinners need not fear,
> And then with louder note and bold,
> To raze the walls of Satan's hold.
> The trumpet coming thus between,
> The hand that held it scarce was seen!
> But when the Captain says, "Well done,
> Thou good and faithful servant—come!
> Lay down the pitcher and the lamp,
> Lay down the trumpet, leave the camp,"
> The weary hands will then be seen,
> Clasped in those pierced ones—nught between.

It was surely more than a coincidence that on the day he preached his last sermon, thirteen days before his death, his sister brought out these lines from among their mother's papers, and read them to the weary man for the first time. The first three verses may be taken as fitly, and very finely, expressing the opinion of Dr. Elmslie's preaching formed by thousands.

In 1872 he became assistant to Dr. Dykes at the Presbyterian Church, Regent-square, London. Before that, young as he was, he had some experience as a teacher, assisting the Professor of Natural Philosophy at Aberdeen, and acting as Hebrew tutor in the Free College, Edinburgh. From Regent-square he went in 1874 to Willesden to form a new Presbyterian congregation in that rapidly growing north-western suburb. Perhaps his worthiest monument is the strong congregation of devout, intelligent Christians that he gathered there.

He continued still an eager student, reading with facility not only Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, but also Arabic, Dutch, German, and French. His learning was of too real a sort to become a burden or a snare to its possessor; rather he wore it as a weapon that could be handled readily as occasion required. When a professor of Hebrew literature and Old Testament exegesis was needed at the Presbyterian College in Queen-square, his Synod unanimously appointed him to the chair at the age of thirty-six. It is greatly to be desired that those who are set to train future preachers should themselves be men full of the spirit of the great office they are called to fill. In this respect Queen-square College, which has now at its head an even more distinguished preacher of Christ crucified, enjoys a rare distinction.

Soon after this appointment Mr. Elmslie's own University of Aberdeen gave him the degree of D.D. He at once won the hearts of his students by the warmth of his sympathy, the freshness of his enthusiasm, and the obvious delight he had in imparting knowledge. Although no longer a pastor, he did not cease to preach. Sermons were not for him an irksome task, but a joyful service of the Master whom he adored and for whom he lived. His services were eagerly sought throughout his own branch of the Church, and also by other Nonconformists. His large heart made him only too willing to comply with the requests that came from all quarters, particularly from those in charge of influential London pulpits. He was thus led to do the work of two men; some of his friends say of three, for he did not a little literary work besides.

It is impossible to blame the eager and devoted worker now, but a word ought to be said firmly and plainly about the evil of over-driving the willing horse. Dr. Donald Fraser, at the crowded and solemn funeral service held in his church, said some true and serious things on this point, doubtless out of his own experience. Dr. Dykes, in conducting the service at the College next day, said, "I brought him to London, and London—that devourer of men—has worn him out." Unhappily, these sorrowful words, spoken under deep emotion, represent the fact that, humanly speaking, Dr. Elmslie might have continued to serve Christ for another five-and-twenty years, but for the strain of overwork. The sword fairly wore out the scabbard, so keen was it. It is not easy to propose a remedy for this danger, but we may at least earnestly appeal to those who seek and profit by the utterances of prominent men, to consider that these utterances involve a far more serious strain on nerve and spirit than audiences are apt to think; and that the workers who delight and guide thousands should be allowed time for the cultivation of ordinary health. The wise will insist on getting this; the right-hearted, warned by such a sad case, will not make their invitations too pressing.

While saying all this advisedly, we have little sympathy with those who cry out as though something quite mysterious had happened, and the cause of Christ had suffered an irreparable loss. Allowance may be freely made for the acute sense of bereavement, but it should be borne in mind that the work is that of Him who "ever liveth"; that it is in every part ordered by Him with unerring wisdom and love; that there is no worker, even the very best, whose place He cannot fill; that it belongs to Him to fix the time for calling the servant to rest; and that a work such as that of Dr. Elmslie is not, in the highest sense, incomplete because he has not lived to finish it below. There is only one City—and it is not this metropolis of the world—worthy of the immortal and the redeemed: "the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it," and thither the faithful servant's work—be he an Apollos or only an Aquila—will surely follow him in ways that quite overpower the reverent imagination.

It is a smaller thing, but still one deserving to be noticed, that Professor Elmslie practised Christian giving all through life, and therefore gave largely and without ostentation. It would, of course, be wrong to state the amount given in a single year, but the amount would startle and shame many possessed of much larger means.

We abstain from discussing what may or may not have been Dr. Elmslie's views on matters of doctrine or criticism. Exceptional as he was in intellect and learning, the really great thing about him was the full Christian heart; and those who knew him best are, we are assured, feeling most keenly the loss of one to whom they looked as likely to prove a rock of rallying and strength in those seas of controversy which are swelling up around us.

[Our portrait of Dr. Elmslie is engraved, by permission, from the photographic frontispiece to the "Protestant Dissenters' Almanac" for 1890, published by Robert Banks & Son, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, E.C., price 6d. The photograph was taken as recently as October 30.]

BLESSING AT PAIGNTON.

Mr. J. C. Rainey, writing of a mission held on his return to Paignton, Devon, says:—

The keynote struck last week has been sustained all through—viz., "O Lord, Thou hast searched me and known me." One said to me, "How real and solemn the meetings have been." And each night those who have worked heartily in the mission have had the joy of leading some precious souls to Christ.

A true spirit of Christ-like union has been shown, the Lord's people from the various communions in our town coming happily among us to strengthen our hands and their own also.

SOLDIERS IN BRISTOL.—Mr. C. Smith, hon. secretary of the Soldiers' Christian Association, Bristol, writes to report progress in the work amongst soldiers. Some, he says, have lately been converted. A tea was given last week at the Gospel Hall, Bishopstone, to about ninety of the men, most of them young recruits, soon to join the Glo'ster regiment. Mr. James Vicary, Major-Gen. Davids, and Captain West gave addresses.

GLAD TIDINGS OF PEACE.*

To shepherd swains,
On Judah's plains,
An angel once descended;
A flood of light,
His downward flight,
And resting-place, attended.

These simple swains,
On Judah's plains,
Whilst on the vision dwelling,
Were filled with fears;
For all the spheres
Were bright with beams excelling.

The moon, on high,
Lit up the sky;
The stars—no one a traitor—
Ne'er sweeter shone;
For everyone
Looked down on its Creator.

"Be not afraid,"
The angel said,
"Good tidings, lo! I'm bringing
To nations all,
In sin and thrall,
With Judah's race beginning.

"To you is born,
This winter morn,
In David's city, hoary,
The Saviour Lord,
The Christ adored,
The shrouded King of Glory.

"He lowly lies,
Amid the cries
Of oxen, in a manger;
O wondrous thing!
Though Judah's King,
To Bethlehem He's a stranger!

"Now, go and see
This mystery;
Lo! on their way are sages.
From farthest East,
Their eyes to feast
Upon the Hope of ages."

They guided are,
By one bright star,
To David's ancient city;
Where Christ doth rest,
On Mary's breast,
A mother full of pity.

Then, all around,
A joyous sound
Of heavenly beings, quiring,
Made that sweet morn
Like Eden's dawn,
Or heaven on earth inspiring.

And these their strains,
"O shepherd swains,
Lo! ours the joy of telling
The wondrous birth
Of Christ, on earth,
Where God hath fixed his dwelling.

"Glory to God,
Peace on earth's sod,
Unto The Highest glory!"
Heaven's roof did ring,
Whilst they did sing
Aloud The Bethlehem Story.

THE BORDER COUNTIES' TENT was pitched at nine places during the past season, and 128 evangelistic meetings were held. In the country districts almost every house within a circumference of four miles from the tent was visited, the people talked with, and a booklet left with them; thus with voice and word the Gospel was preached and kept before the people. God sent his blessing abundantly with the special effort. Communications may be addressed to Richard Hill, Concrete Cottage, Melrose, N.B.

For the Young.

THE CHILDREN'S WARD.

Do you know what it is to have to lie in bed day after day, week after week, not to be able to turn over or raise yourself without help, and getting better, oh, so slowly? And if you do know something about it, don't you think it is much worse to be ill just at the beginning of the holidays, or when Christmas is near?

If you are well and strong, I am sure you must feel very sorry for those little children who are ill just now: while you are beginning to count the days to the close of the term, and are longing to have Christmas come, that you may have all sorts of fun. Think what a number of little sufferers there are all over London alone; the hundreds who are sick and dying; some in grand beautiful homes, where they have every comfort that money can bring; some in dark cellars and dreary garrets, amongst dirt and wretchedness, such as you never saw and can hardly imagine; and some on hospital beds.

Come with me to one of these hospitals, and take a peep into the children's ward. Plenty of light from those large windows shows us a great many bright, gay pictures on the walls, and pretty texts with sweet comforting words. It shows us the toy shelf with its picture books and dolls; a nice blazing fire, and vases of flowers on each window sill. But it shows us, too, some very white, pinched little faces that belong to the occupants of the white cots, and we begin to feel sympathetic even before we know what is the matter with each.

See that pretty little girl, with fluffy, yellow hair, in the cot at one end of the ward. She broke her leg by falling off a seesaw in the playground. She was brought to the hospital sobbing and crying, and so terribly frightened when she saw the doctor who was going to set her leg. Yet she bore it bravely, poor little maid, though she could not help crying a little; and when it was over, she laid back on her pillow, remarking very wisely that it was "a good job it wasn't the other leg too."

Now look at baby Miriam—a wee, thin mite of a child, who, when she was brought in, was not expected to live many days, and had to be coaxed and coaxed to take a few teaspoonfuls of milk now and then. But she is better now, and really able to go home; only the kind Sister at the head of the ward begged to keep her a little longer that she might feed her up with plenty of milk, to strengthen the poor little body.

Here is a boy who is always singing. He is in for a broken leg, and for weeks has had to lie on his back without moving. There is not much he can do to amuse himself; but he can sing, and sing he does, until all who are old enough, and well enough, catch the infection, and we hear rounds and school songs, Christmas carols, and sweet children's hymns, all day long. This boy, for no reason that we can make out, always goes by the name of "Froggy," and he has such a good memory for rhyme of any kind that he is quite entertaining to the other children.

We pass by two or three empty beds, where the little patients have recovered and been sent home. A few days ago, one of these beds held a dear little boy of six, who was brought in very badly burned. But he was not long in the bed. He became very much worse a night or two afterwards, and, as the morning dawned, Jesus took him home to Himself; and now he will never feel any more pain, and his burns will be quite well.

"Where's that little new boy?" asked one of the children the next morning. "He has gone home, dear," answered the Sister, who did not wish to distress the child by the thought of death. "He is quite well now." "Well, he has soon got well!" was the reply; and when we think what poor miserable homes most of these little ones will return to, when they are discharged from the hospital, we almost wish they too could join little Georgie in that bright Home for little children.

And so they lie, for the most part so patiently, and so dependent upon other people's kindness and care that one's heart aches for them. Christmas is coming, but they will not be able to run about and play games, and have the happy time that you expect to have.

Will you not think of these little children, and, amidst all your preparations for a merry Christmas, contrive something to give them pleasure? It does not take much to please them—a scrap-book, a doll, a box of beads, a puzzle, or any old toys and books that you have quite done with and think only fit to throw away. Such things will amuse these little ones for a long time, and help to divert their thoughts from the aching head or leg, and give them a little brightness in their monotonous lives. For under the very best of circumstances it is monotonous to be ill. How pleasant it would be for you to lighten some little one's burden, and bring a smile to some weary, fretful little face by a Christmas gift.

THE CHRIST-CHILD'S GIFT.

A CHRISTMAS STORY.

[The following is taken from an exquisite little story in CHRISTMAS ARROWS (the Christmas Number of The Quiver), published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., price 6d. The number is one of the best of this year's Christmas annuals, and contains a great many good things besides.]

That same October afternoon, while the children were making plans, a girl whose face was bright, although it looked a little tired just then, was walking slowly up the stairs of the next house. She was an artist, and was generally very busy; but this afternoon, when she reached her own room, she lay back in her chair instead of standing at her easel, for she had just finished one picture, and was trying to think what the next should be about.

"If I were as lucky as some folk, I should just see the very scene that is worth painting," she was saying to herself rather enviously, and then—she raised her eyes and saw the very thing she wanted!

Two little children, a girl and a boy, were peeping at her through the window, with their pretty faces flushed with excitement, and with bubbling laughter breaking from their parted lips. The younger was a tiny lad, with short golden curls clustering round the shining tin pot which he wore helmet-wise upon his head, and with eyes as blue as hyacinth-bells which have grown in a shady nook; and, in a sudden dread that he might come to harm, the girl-artist rushed to the window, and throwing it up, she took the little fellow in her arms.

"Why, you darling!" she cried, as she lifted him in, half delighted, half scared. "Have you dropped from the skies, you elves, or are you fairy burglars? I have had visitors before, but they never came to me from cloudland!"

"How do you do?" asked Hermie politely. She had clambered in unaided, and now stood surveying the young lady, who was cuddling Whiffles as if she loved him, and who yet was asking such strange questions. "We haven't come from cloudland; we have come from next door. He is Reginald, and I am Hermione."

"What grand names!" exclaimed the young lady, and then she kissed Whiffles again, and began to laugh. It was a soft laugh, and somebody who used to listen to it (and who afterwards became a great friend of the children's, too) used to say that it reminded him of the hushed song of a bird mingling with sunny water as it danced caressingly over shining stones; and of a woman, whose arms folded lovingly round the clinging weight of a little child; and of all that was beautiful and good. But Hermie and Whiffles did not think of any of these things; they only knew that her laugh made them want to laugh, too, and so they did, and by the time their laughter ceased, the three were very good friends indeed.

"And now tell me all about yourselves," she said, at last. "What made you want to come to me?"

So they told her, and then Mary—she said that was her name, and that they might call her by it—wanted to know if they would not be missed, and someone be frightened about them.

"There is not a someone," said Hermie, cheerfully. "Miss Piper—she is my governess—only comes in the morning, and we don't often see gran'ma, except on Sundays, and Jane is always going away to be with the other servants downstairs. No one will miss us till five o'clock."

It was on the tip of Mary's tongue to say, What of their mother, but she never asked children a lot of questions she would have thought rude to ask grown-up people, and perhaps that was one of the reasons all children liked her.

This partiular question, however, soon settled itself, for the little ones began wandering around the room to look at the pictures, and came to a standstill before an engraving of Rivière's "Sympathy."

"I fink she is sorry 'cause her mother's dead," said Whiffles, looking up at the sad-eyed child in the picture with his own eyes very widely opened; but Hermie disagreed.

"I don't think she looks sorry enough for that," she said dreamily. "You are so very veriest sorry for your mother, you know; perhaps it is her father."

Mary stooped to kiss the wistful upturned face; she did not know which part of the little speech sounded the more pathetic.

Then they had tea, and some slices of dry bread with it. "I can't afford butter for a long time, because I bought the engraving," Mary explained merrily, and as if it were quite a natural thing that she could not have both; and while they had it the children talked to her.

They told her about their uncle Victor, and about how Jane had said Whiffles was his heir, and would be a very grand gentleman one of these days.

"I thought she meant all his hair had gone to Whiffles, and that is why he is so bald," remarked Hermie, "but when I told gran'ma, it made her so cross that I mightn't go downstairs for a month."

Then her brother had his little say, and then, tea being over, Mary began talking to them. I do not know what started it, but the talk turned upon the coming Christmastide, which was still two months away.

"I went to school in Germany," Mary said, "and that is a country the other side of the seas, where they think a great deal about this beautiful season, and all that it means."

"Germany! I know it," called out Hermie, proud to show that Miss Piper's teaching had not been wasted. "It is a pink place on the map."

Mary laughed: "That is it, dear; but somehow it does not look so pink when you get there. Well, in this school of mine, we used to have a big Christmas-tree covered with lighted candles, and with little presents hanging from the branches, one for each girl."

Hermie drew a long breath. "That must have been lovely," she said. "Gran'mamma does not let us go to parties, so I never saw a pretty tree like that. I don't like Christmas."

"Oh, yes, you do, my darling!" Mary slid one hand round the little girl's neck as she knelt beside her, and with the other she drew Whiffles' curly head down upon her shoulder. "I am quite sure you care very much. Why, it is a birthday, Hermie. All little children care for birthdays, don't they?"

"A birthday?" repeated the child, doubtfully. This was a new way of looking at it. "It comes in the hymn—Christmas does, I mean—and the words are long; I don't understand it."

She caught up her silk sash and began industriously plaiting the knotted fringes, feeling suddenly shy; but Whiffles raised his head, and kissed Mary full upon the lips.

"Make a story of it. Tell us about Kissmas," he said, coaxingly, and Mary obediently began at once.

"Our Father who art in heaven," she said: wondering how much or how little these motherless children had been taught. "You know who that is, don't you, my sweet? That is God, who made this beautiful world, and you, and me, and Hermie, and who loved us so much He sent us his only Son."

"I know," Whiffles cried excitedly, and rumpling up his yellow curls with both his chubby hands. "He was a baby boy. We've got a picture in the nursery, at home, and He is lying in a stable."

"That was because his mother was so poor, and she had nowhere better to cradle this little holy, helpless, beautiful Child."

"And it was his birthday," said Hermie, softly. She had left off plaiting her sash, and leaned forward, with both elbows planted upon this new friend's knees. "What presents did He have, Mary?"

"Gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. That means the very best and most precious things that could be brought to Him. For the men who carried them knew that this pretty Baby, who lay cooing and babbling upon the golden straw, was the Christ-child and the great Prince of Peace who owned the whole world. And what else do you think they brought him, Hermie?"

The child looked up, and seemed to read her answer in the kind eyes. "Loves," she said.

"Right, dear, they brought Him love too, or else none of their gifts would have been worth his having. Oh, my darlings"—she waited a moment before saying these last words, and drew the children closer with those strong young arms, which felt so empty sometimes, and so satisfied to-day—"the Christ-child is coming to us again very soon. Won't you try and prepare for Him, and give Him presents, and give Him love? People are so busy, and we are all so full of our own pleasures, that we are apt to forget all about Him, and it is so sad when the children do."

"I won't! Really, I won't!" Hermie answered her; and Whiffles said the same.

"And now, my chicks, you must be going back, for it is a quarter to five," Mary said briskly, after she had walked to the window and satisfied herself that there could be no harm in her visitors going back the way they came. "What is it, Hermie? Oh, yes, you may come again another day, if you tell Jane about it first, and she does not think grandmamma will mind. Good-bye, dear little lad. Let me lift you up; here's the pail. Now for the sister. Good-bye, and God bless you!"

"Good-bye, good-bye," returned the children, kissing their hands to her; and as she stood watching them clamber in at their nursery window, the sound of Whiffles' baby-voice was borne back to her by the wind.

"God bless you!" he echoed.

[We are sure our little readers would enjoy the rest of this story, and we hope they will get it for themselves. There are two more chapters which tell of what Hermie and Whiffles did for "The Christ Child," and of the gift that He gave to them.]

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Dec. 22. Mal. iii. 1—7: Mon., Dec. 23. Mal. iii. 7—18; Tues., Dec. 24. Mal. iv. 1—6. Wed., Dec. 25. Ps. lxxii. 1—20; Thurs., Dec. 26. Ps. cxiv. 1—11; Fri., Dec. 27. Ps. cxlvi. 1—10; Sat., Dec. 28. Ps. cxlviii. 1—20.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. Newton Jones has held special services at Wing, Leighton Buzzard. The village meetings were attended with increasing interest and much blessing; while the workers' meetings were encouraging. Mr. Jones will be happy to communicate with any friends desiring to arrange special services for children. Address: 190, Alexandra-road, St. John's-wood, N.W.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION.

A flying visit was recently paid by Mr. H. Hutchinson to the parish of All Saints', Liverpool. The heartiness and brightness of the missioner at once won the little ones. They listened with rapt attention to the addresses, illustrated with peculiar tact and ability, and rejoiced in the thought that they were permitted to be the little friends of the Lord Jesus. There is good reason for believing that a goodly number of them received permanent blessing. The Scripture Union has received a large accession of members, and about forty of the more earnest have been formed into a devotional class, meeting weekly.

J. W. Davies, M.A., Vicar.

At St. Chrysostom, Everton, we have cause for deep thankfulness for the bright, helpful lessons conveyed through Mr. H. Hutchinson's visit to us, to young and old alike; we pray that the special effort may be followed by much upspringing of abiding good fruit, to the glory and praise of the Master. E. D. W.

THE WORK OF GOD IN BOURNEMOUTH.

In this beautiful and increasingly popular seaside resort the winter's work has been commenced with considerable vigour. Some weeks ago Rev. Thomas Cook conducted a ten days' mission in the Punshon Memorial Wesleyan Chapel. The attendance at all the meetings was very large, and the power of God was manifestly at work among the people. Not less than 150 persons were dealt with as inquirers. The afternoon Bible-readings for Christians were hardly less important in their results than the evangelistic services. Some might not fully agree with all of the statements made on the subject of holiness; but there could be no doubt as to the life of victory over sin which Mr. Cook taught with such clearness and power. This evangelist's style is peculiarly quiet and effective. We rejoice in the good work he has done.

These meetings were followed shortly afterwards by a united Gospel temperance mission, held in the Shaftesbury Hall. Among the speakers was Lady Hope, who, not only at the public meeting, but at the special meeting for ladies, did excellent service. Rev. J. Ossian Davies, during this mission, proved himself as able and eloquent in the advocacy of temperance as he is in the pulpit and on the platform of the lecturer.

In the Baptist Church, at Lansdowne, a very successful mission was conducted by Rev. J. R. Wood, of Holloway. The pastor, Rev. W. V. Robinson, thus writes of these services: "Based upon a sound exposition of the Scriptures, and prompted by an earnest spirit of consecration, Mr. Wood's addresses were eminently calculated to produce deep spiritual impressions. There was a quiet yet thorough work proceeding in the hearts of many who attended the services. The Bible-readings were full of instruction and helpfulness."

The Y.M.C.A. has also been visited by two most earnest and successful servants of God. Dr. Thain Davidson made a deep impression by his thoughtful addresses; and Mr. W. R. Lane, a week later, deepened the impression, until many cases of decision followed. The secretary writes: "The Monday evening address to young men was singularly powerful, and very few listeners left before the end of the meeting, which was continued until nearly ten o'clock. Many young men raised their hands for prayer, and twelve of these subsequently stood up and publicly confessed Christ. A similar result followed the general evangelistic meetings. Among those who received blessing were several of our associates, which we regard as an answer to special prayer, and an earnest of greater things to come." Very heartily do we desire that the expectation of coming blessing may be fully realised.

Captain Dawson's services have commenced again. These are always popular, and are a blessing, not only to the Y.M.C.A. but to the town.

The Presbyterian Church has recently favoured the town with a visit from the popular London preacher, Rev. John McNeill. The Richmond Hill Congregational Church has been so revived through the work of Rev. J. Ossian Davies that the chapel is to be taken down and a larger one built in its place. The East Cliff Congregational Church has just completed the enlargement of its premises, rendered necessary by the successful work of Rev. M. Lansdowne, whose ministry is marked by much energy and zeal. The Baptists of Westbourne are preparing to build the West Cliff Union Chapel, to be commenced early in the New Year. During this year they have put up an iron mission hall, in the centre of a growing working class population, where an earnest and successful work is being done under the superintendence of Rev. R. B. Morrison.

These signs of activity in the work of Christ are gratifying. The great need of the town is some manifestation of the unity really existing among evangelical Christians. Even the undenominational work becomes a separate interest, and does not sufficiently unite the various sections of the Church. Is there no way of securing this manifestation of unity through the Shaftesbury Hall evangelistic services?

THE THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

Dear Sir,—God is blessing the efforts of our missionaries on the Thames in a wonderful way. The past year has witnessed not only an increase in the number of our staff, but a greater ingathering of souls. Not a day passes without our men coming in contact with sailors and others, who, through the humble instrumentality of this Mission, have been led from darkness to light. How dark the past has been, in many cases, and how strong the chains with which they have been bound, few people can have any idea; but the glorious Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ has proved more than sufficient for every need.

I could fill columns with interesting details of the blessed work of seeking and saving the lost on the Thames—of drunkards made sober, of violent men made gentle, of blasphemers made to praise. But I must forbear, referring your readers meanwhile, to our little magazine, where every information concerning the work may be found.

The many kind friends who contribute towards carrying on this work may be assured that their gifts are well used. During the first ten months of the year, 37,900 visits had been paid to vessels: over 3,700 services conducted with an aggregate attendance of about 90,000: and nearly 612,700 books and tracts distributed. While much has been done, there remains much still to do. At the present moment the Mission sadly needs help, and I appeal on behalf of sailors, many of whom, while we are in the house of God singing "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men," will be tossing on the mighty deep.—Yours, in his service.

Some Scottish Missions.—IX.

MR. QUARRIER'S HOMES.

"THE Orphan Homes of Scotland" is a title of such far-reaching significance that my readers will at once infer that Mr. Quarrier does not labour for the waifs and strays of Glasgow alone. Little ones are received from any part of Scotland, their sad qualification being that they either have no parents at all, or that those they have are unable to support them.

Many years ago Mr. Quarrier's heart was moved by the painful sights of child-destitution which day by day he had to witness. With no idea of what he would be called to do in future years, he interested himself in one or two pitiful cases; and step by step he was led on, until it became clear to him that this, and not his shoemaking, was to be his life-work.

In the heart of the city of Glasgow is a commodious building which, under one roof, includes Orphan Home, Working Boys' Home, Children's Night Refuge, Young Women's Shelter, and Mission Hall. To this institution all "cases" are introduced at first, after which those found eligible are sent to which has been built some few miles out in the country. To reach it, a journey of about half an hour from Glasgow brings us to Bridge of Weir, from which the colony is about two miles distant by road. To accomplish this latter portion Mr. Quarrier sends a conveyance to meet any friends who have previously intimated their intention of paying the Homes a visit.

This interesting village has been erected upon an old farm, 40 acres in extent, and comprises thirty-one buildings. Near the entrance is the house in which Mr. and Mrs. Quarrier reside—a plain substantial dwelling, well adapted to its purpose. A main avenue leads to the principal building, which contains class-rooms, and accommodation for teachers. The large school-room was formerly used as a chapel, but, by the generosity of friends in giving money for this specific purpose, a has been erected, with a clock tower a hundred and twenty feet in height, which contains a fine peal of bells. The inside of this edifice is quite palatial, and is in every way fitted up in superb style. Here service is conducted by Mr. Quarrier, or by any visitor who may be there at the hour appointed. Situated east and west of the main avenue (which bears the significant name of "Faith Avenue") are the cottages in which the little ones live. These are severally in charge of a "Mother," or a "Father and Mother," who, having no children of their own to provide for, are free to act the parent's part to those who are deprived of a parent's love. About thirty children—varying in age from fifteen years to as many months—are allotted to each house in "families" of boys and of girls, the latter usually being cared for by a "Mother" only.

A hasty visit, which was all the limits of time enabled me to pay, afforded no opportunity of learning the histories (many invested with painful interest) of those young lives, now so happy and bright. But it was quite long enough to show can be wrought by those who have within their breasts the yearning love for the unfortunate which characterised the life of their Master upon earth. Here were some four or five hundred children, clean, healthy, and joyous, who once knew nought but dirt, misery, and vice. What grand possibilities are before them, and what a sphere of usefulness for tender-hearted "Mothers" and "Fathers," to whom it is committed to bring them up "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

School lessons, taught by certificated teachers, various trades for the boys, and laundry work for the girls, all find a place in the daily curriculum; while that remarkable anomaly, "the ship on land," is used for the instruction in marine technicalities of those who are nautically inclined. This is a full-rigged brig, 120 feet long, which is bolted firmly upon a bed of concrete. Seen from the railway, it may well strike the uninitiated stranger as

"THE EIGHTH WONDER OF THE WORLD."

It will accommodate between twenty and thirty boys on board, who sleep in the forecastle; the after part is divided into a sitting and dining-room, two chart rooms, and the captain's cabin. The vessel is fitted up with admirable completeness. It has been suggested that it might have proved of more real utility if it had been allowed to remain in its native element, and, by making periodical trips around the coast, accomplish the double purpose of giving a more practical training to the boys, and at the same time exciting and maintaining an interest in its youthful crew, in the minds and hearts of hundreds who will never see it under its present conditions. But this would involve a loss of that personal supervision and influence by which Mr. Quarrier's success has so largely been achieved.

But not only are painful associations—as already intimated—attached to the inmates of the cottages, but also to some of the cottages themselves. Some of them are tributes to the memory of departed loved ones, which those who mourn their loss have erected in humble submission to Him who doeth "all things well."

could be raised than one of these?

A cloud was cast over the community on the occasion of my visit in that one of the little lads had that morning been called home; and, as we watched the making of the tiny coffin, Mr. Quarrier communicated the sad fact, that, in the first years of some of these waifs, diseases and maladies were contracted which no amount of care or treatment could eradicate. Here and there, too, among the groups in the meadow, were the figures, stunted and deformed, of those who would never be able to do much in the battle of life; and in the miniature hospital were one or two very sad cases of incurable affliction.

It was gratifying, however, to find that the general standard of health in the "village" is exceedingly good. Nor could one expect it to be otherwise, after seeing the perfection with which the ventilating and sanitary arrangements are carried out, to say nothing of its bracing situation.

MR. QUARRIER'S POLICY is to have all the materials, in whatever department, of the best quality. Indeed, if the worthy director can be said to have a weakness it is in the direction of providing more luxuriously than the exigencies of the case demand. The church is grand enough for a bishop; the stables a squire might covet; the storehouse would do credit to a "West-end" street; of the ship any captain would be proud; while to the youngsters some of the cottages must seem little palaces. One's first impression, therefore, is that money does not go so far in Mr. Quarrier's hands as in some other institutions, as far as practical utility is concerned. But his inflexible belief is that the best materials are the most enduring, and, therefore, "in the long run" prove the cheapest; and in this he is right, as recent revelations in connection with some of our London Board school-houses have abundantly proved. Besides, who could grudge these poor lads and lasses their mite of extra comfort, after all the hardships most of them have endured!

In addition to this and the city branches of the work, there is a Home in Ontario, Canada, to which those who emigrate are despatched, when they are with whom arrangements have been made to receive them.

I must not omit from this notice the name of Mr. Richard Hunter, who has for years been at Mr. Quarrier's right hand. He was with him when the first child was picked up, and has all along taken a very keen interest in the spiritual and temporal welfare of the little ones. For years he has superintended the large forenoon service on Sundays at the Homes in James Morrison-street, and rendered aid in keeping the accounts of the Homes.

In concluding, I may mention that the present village cost £100,000, and the average yearly income is about £19,000. The support of this large family of 450 children (besides the elders of the community), costs £30 per day, while the erection of the cottages averages £1500. It is a pleasing feature of the work that it is so warmly supported by Scottish Christians, who regard it as a national institution, thus justifying its comprehensive name.

In my report of the Edinburgh Medical Mission I omitted to mention that it was during the years of Dr. Burns Thomson's superintendence of the Cowgate Medical Mission (for it was not at first connected with the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society) that the whisky shop was transformed into a house of healing; and that it was with his own hands, assisted by those students who cherished loving memories of the place, and from distant lands gave it its endearing name, that the tap-room numbers and other signs were obliterated, and the scene changed.

I am also requested by Lady Hope Grant to state that she does not now occupy the position as one of the managers of the Soldiers' Home at Piershill. G. E. M.

CAGE-LANE MISSION, PLUMSTEAD.

PLUMSTEAD is a populous district, sadly needing evangelistic awakening. The inhabitants number 15,000, but there is church and chapel accommodation for only 1500. The old disused public-house, in which Miss Russell's Mission is carried on, has for some time been quite inadequate to the requirements of the work. It is gratifying to know that a new and larger hall is now being erected.

The annual meeting of thanksgiving was held last week, when an encouraging report was rendered of the year's operations. It was cause of joy to the workers that many souls have been saved through the preaching of the Gospel, while others have been awakened to a sense of their spiritual need. The Sunday-school, mothers' meetings, and other agencies, have been blessed in themselves, and contributed in no small measure to the depth and breadth of the general testimony for Christ.

Colonel Travers presided over the meeting, which was addressed by Revs. J. B. Figgis, E. J. Doherty, and J. Wilson, and Mr. J. Simms. The balance-sheet showed a large sum due to the treasurer, the collection of funds for the new building having exhausted the sources whence would otherwise have come help towards the working expenses. We regret to know that so good a work should thus be crippled, even for a short time.

CHRISTIANITY AND BUDDHISM.—All interested in the modern discussions on Buddhism should consult the fascinating volume "The Appeal to the Serpent," by Rev. S. Langdon, of Ceylon. (Religious Tract Society.) Under the guise of a story, it exhibits the early contact between Buddhism and Christianity, and in its leading characters vividly illustrates the irreconcilable antagonism between the two. The book abounds in striking pict res of ancient Buddhist life.

Letters to the Editor.

THE FRENCH VAUDOIS IN THE HIGH ALPS.

DEAR SIR,—The descendants of the converts of Peter Waldo in the twelfth century, driven by persecution long since to the mountain fastnesses of the French Alps, the scene of Felix Neff's labours, now find it impossible to sustain life on the sterile and exhausted soil, amidst ice and snow, and they have been undergoing fearful sufferings from cold and hunger, which have been intensified of late years, chiefly in the Val Freissinières, the accounts of which are heartrending.

A great effort is being made by our French Protestant brethren to have them removed in detachments to Algeria. Already twelve families have been happily settled at Trois Marabouts, in the province of Oran, proving the wisdom of the measure. The Paris Committee, of which Dr. Gustave Monod is the president, and which is acting in concert with the Lyons Committee, of which the Dean of Ripon is president, earnestly appeal to British Christians to come to their help in this Christ-like enterprise. It has been arranged that the money spent in settling one band of colonists will be gradually refunded by them for transporting a succeeding band, till all have been provided for, say in three or four detachments.

The estimated cost of transport and settlement is £160 per family. Twenty families are now ready to go when the funds are in hand. The Committee have now £1800, or over half of what is required. The French Government have made a concession of land, huts are being built, and M. Réveillaud, who has taken a leading part in the cause, has gone to Algeria to complete the arrangements for their reception. Let us hope that these Vaudois colonists may be as a light in a dark place in the midst of the people of Algeria.—Yours faithfully, DONALD MATHESON.

"BEHIND THE SCENES."

[We have, on consideration, thought it better to confine ourselves to the publication of the following letter from one personally and habitually interested in this question. Other correspondents introduce collateral subjects not necessarily involved, and which would widen and complicate the discussion. We think that instead of further correspondence in print, the issue raised by "Joses Barnabas," and other questions connected with it, might well form the subject of private conference, with prayer that results may be arrived at gratifying to God and satisfactory to His servants. Our first correspondent bears an honoured name, and is very far from being of a mercenary spirit. We hear sometimes of evangelists being invited to distant places, and whether from want of thought or otherwise, having their travelling expenses very barely met, or not at all. There are two sides to this, as to every other question. If such work is of God—and it surely is—there must be, if not a rule, yet some principle, which would apply to all cases.—ED.]

DEAR SIR,—My attention has been called to an article in THE CHRISTIAN, Dec. 6, entitled, "Behind the Scenes," in which the writer remarks on the treatment of Speakers at Conventions by those who financially conduct them.

Having for fifteen years been connected with one to which allusion is made, though under a feigned name, I think it due to my valued brethren in the Lord, who have so boldly and faithfully stood up for truth, far from palatable to many, to say that no pecuniary recompense would have induced them to take the stand they did for their Master, neither would they have accepted any.

They have many, many times declined to take all that was offered for their expenses, &c.; and at times have even given back a part towards the Convention funds.

If your correspondent would write to me in his own name, and give me the name and address of any brother who has inadvertently had cause of complaint, I shall most gladly set the matter right.

This statement is also due to those who have so kindly and liberally contributed towards the needful, and very considerable, expenses of these gatherings, upon whose conduct some not very complimentary remarks are made by your correspondent.

Whilst praising God for his abounding goodness in these Conventions, many of those who attend or have the management of them do it at no little sacrifice; and I, for one, have no wish to see this work, so much blessed by the presence of our Lord and Master, and the power of his Spirit, degenerate into a mere attempted payment for services which money cannot recompense.

The mercenary spirit, or the Spirit of God, would, one or other, soon have to retire.

Yours respectfully, ROBERT WILSON.

Broughton Grange, near Carlisle.

Personalia.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is said to be contemplating a lecturing tour in Australia.

Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, is dangerously ill. He caught cold when driving home recently, and the affection has taken a somewhat serious form.

Dr. Talmage has been to Athens, and captured a corner-stone for his new Tabernacle from Mars Hill. He has preached there to a large concourse of people.

Rev. Joseph Brown, D.D., of Glasgow, was knocked down by a cab in one of the streets of the city on Friday evening, and is suffering severely from the shock. He is seventy-nine years of age.

Mr. L. D. Wishard has been addressing good audiences in Colombo, Ceylon, on progress in Y.M.C.A. work in America and elsewhere; he combated the notion that Christianity is losing its hold on the young men of to-day.

Rev. L. S. Tugwell has resigned the Secretaryship of the Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society on account of ill-health, and Rev. H. E. Noyes, vicar of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, has been appointed in his stead.

Mrs. Beecher Stowe, the authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" (says the New York correspondent of The Manchester Examiner), has become hopelessly insane. Most of her time is spent in crooning old church hymns which were popular fifty years ago.

Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, founder of the Florence Night Mission, New York, has received a hearty welcome to India. Under medical advice, he is travelling for rest; he expects to visit the principal places in India, and desires to see as much as possible of missionary work.

Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, is the subject of a brief sketch (with portrait) in this month's City of London Association News. Mr. Smith, says the writer, is a general favourite at Conference gatherings, and a recognised authority on Biblical exegesis, especially on prophetic subjects.

Miss M. S. S. Herdman, the soldiers' friend, proceeds to India in January, to be married to Rev. A. Ferrier, Church of Scotland chaplain, Allahabad. There she hopes to extend her soldiers' work, which God has so graciously owned at home. She will be accompanied to India by her father, Rev. Dr. Herdman, of St. Mary's, Melrose, N.B.

The Duchess of Rutland, who is a frequent contributor to The Queen, is sketched in that paper last week. "There are few more energetic workers in the field of practical philanthropy; she spares herself neither time nor trouble to advance any cause that will conduce to the popular good. Of temperance, in particular, she is a zealous advocate."

Mr. Joseph Rabinowitch.—This remarkable man had an opportunity of giving an account of his work amongst his Jewish countrymen, at Kischeneff, in Bessarabia, to the Committee of the Religious Tract Society. He has already printed large numbers of his sermons, and has asked the Society to aid him in issuing others, and this the Committee have gladly promised to do.

Mr. Charles E. Faithfull, of the Seamen's Rest, Marseilles, we are sorry to learn has been passing through domestic trial during the past five months. It has called him to England, where he will be obliged to stay for three or four weeks. These unusual circumstances have delayed the issue of the annual report; that will, however, be ready shortly. He speaks with thankfulness of the past year's progress, though the Mission funds have suffered from the serious strikes. He is anxious to close the year free of present liabilities, amounting to over £200. His address is care of Dr. Clapton, 10A, St. Thomas-street, Southwark, London, S.E.

Father Hyacinthe.—Abandoned by his natural allies; placed in an ambiguous and untenable position midway between Catholicism and Protestantism, while he still belongs to both; preaching about his Church rather than about Jesus Christ, Father Hyacinthe has fairly condemned himself to impotency. All true friends of the Gospel regret that such rare gifts should have produced such meagre results.—New York Observer.

Mrs. M. B. Ingalls, for thirty-eight years a missionary in Burma, who is now in America, has been welcomed to Boston social and religious circles. She has brought home with her a large collection of curiosities, illustrating domestic and religious life in Burma, and proposes to give, in some of the large cities, expositions of these curios. She gives the proceeds to the Judson Memorial Church in New York. The expositions will shed light on the history and work of missionaries.

Mr. W. J. Orsman, L.C.C., has had £1000 offered by a friend to promote a scheme for providing rooms for that large class in London whose earnings do not exceed 10s. a week. At present such people pay from 20 to 40 per cent. of their income for rent, notwithstanding that their homes are often unfit for habitation. At present rooms cannot be built in the crowded parts of London to be let at rentals varying from 1s. to 2s. 6d. a week; but it is now proposed to erect a house of 100 rooms on a space cleared by the County Council, and sold at a low price.

Rev. Canon Hoare.—For the first time since his alarming illness in the spring, Canon Hoare preached last Sunday afternoon in Trinity Church, Tunbridge Wells. He was apparently weak, and spoke from the reading-desk. The sermon was addressed to working men, who attended in large numbers and filled the seats of the spacious church in front of the preacher. The text was John xi. 3. Rarely have we heard the Gospel preached with such an impressive pathos and tenderness, as the Canon taught the men that nothing else would prepare for a sick and dying bed but an assurance of the Saviour's love. He spoke to a deeply-affected audience as one who had come to the church under the power of Baxter's words which hang in the vestry and which he referred to:—

I'll preach as though I ne'er should preach again,
And as a dying man to dying men.

Obituary.

REV. W. WAYTE ANDREW.

THIS aged and devoted servant of Christ was recently called home. For upwards of fifty years he laboured in the little parish of Ketteringham, Norfolk, but his influence extended far and wide. His picturesque home, Wood Hall, was for years the privileged spot where many of the good and great met for spiritual rest and refreshment. Though not a voluminous writer, his "Germs of Thought" and booklets have been much owned of God to the conversion and building up of souls.

REV. JOHN GARWOOD.

We regret to announce the death of Rev. John Garwood, after a brief illness, at his residence at Kilburn, in the eighty-fifth year of his age. Mr. Garwood was for many years the clerical secretary of the London City Mission. For thirty-two years he discharged the duties of that office with devotion, energy, and wisdom. It was greatly due to his firm hold of evangelical doctrine, his wide sympathy with Christians of all denominations, and his courage in espousing the cause of the Society in days when lay agency was almost unknown, and in many quarters disapproved, that the Mission gained favour with the public and rapidly extended its operations.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—Correspondence relating to the slave trade has been printed as a Parliamentary paper. It extends over a period of nearly two years (1888—89), and has reference to Central, Eastern, and Western Africa, Arabia, Brazil, Egypt, and Turkey.

LONDON YOUNG MEN.—At the Priory, Islington, the meetings are in future to be exclusively for young men, and the same principle has been adopted by the Committee of the Camden Town Association. Thus are strengthened the ranks of those who are striving to concentrate all the energy and ability of the Association upon the one definite object for which it exists—viz., the salvation of young men.—City of London Association News.

The Book World.

The Christmas issue of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR (Sampson Low & Co.) furnishes a very attractive and well-illustrated repertoire of notices of the choicest books of the season. The list is so long and the notices so appreciative that the difficulty with book lovers will be the embarrassment of riches the bulky volume indicates.

THE LOST RING: A Romance of Scottish History. 4s. Thomas Nelson & Sons. This is a romantic history, all the more thrilling because we are assured of "the careful historical accuracy of a document which bears the form of fiction." Its moving scenes are laid chiefly in Geneva and in Scotland. The times are those of Mary Queen of Scots and James VI. Its characters are the persecuted, faithful Protestants, and the secret poisoners and open persecutors of Rome. Youth and age, love and hate, human passion and Divine interposition are the warp and woof of a story of a period in which men lived an intenser life than is known in these tamer days. There are few books of the season which we can commend more heartily than this, for our young people need to be made acquainted with the true character of that false and wicked system which is corrupting the Church of England, and against which Nonconformity at present raises a feeble barrier.

THE INTERNATIONAL LESSONS FOR 1890.

THE GOSPEL OF LUKE. By George F. Pentecost, D.D. 4s. Hodder & Stoughton. This book contains studies on the International Sunday School Lessons for 1890, and is therefore intended to prove specially helpful to Sunday-school teachers. The author has already made his mark by his popular and interesting Bible Studies previously issued; this will not disappoint the expectation which previous volumes have excited. The method in which the subjects are treated is very much that of the preacher. There are main and sub-divisions, but these are often of such a character as to suggest the lessons taught by the subject. Such an orderly arrangement may prove as useful in the Sunday-school class as in the pulpit. The expositions are practical rather than deep; and are intended to help the earnest worker to give an evangelical, often an evangelistic, character to his teaching. The teacher whose chief aim is the conversion of his scholars will find special help in this book. It is calculated to increase his own earnestness and zeal, and to make him more and more "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed." There is not quite so much illustration as one might have expected from Dr. Pentecost, especially when writing for Sunday-school teachers, to whom suitable illustrations are extremely valuable. We cordially commend it as likely to prove helpful, not only to Sunday-school teachers, but to all who are interested in the practical exposition of the Divine Word.

RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

GENTLEMAN JACKSON. By H. Frederick Charles. 3s. A splendid story, packed with interest from cover to cover, and rich with gems of the noblest graces and highest principles of the Christian life. A real boy's book, quite "up to date."

MY BROTHER'S FRIEND. By Eglanton Thorne. 3s. 6d. A story of self-will. Dorothy makes nearly all her own troubles, and many for her friends. Mrs. West—Grace, as she is called—is a beautiful character, and gives a charm to the story, which bears a high tone throughout.

FORESTALLED. By Edith C. Kenyon. 2s. 6d. A very well-written story, homely and life-like, well illustrated, and handsomely got up. It tells how the secret of the "new fabric of Stonefield Mills" was stolen, how the wrong person was accused, and how all comes right at last.

THE LAST HOUSE IN LONDON. By Corona Temple. 3s. A tenderly pathetic story of misunderstanding and separation. It is rather too romantic for the untrained and susceptible hearts of young girls who have to face the work-a-day world. Yet there are beautiful and true lessons to be learned by older readers.

MR. MYGALE'S HOBBY. A story about Spiders. By Darley Dale. 2s. We have laughed much over this book. In the most fascinating manner, this well-known author weaves a story with a plot in it, and in the story we are led along in the company of whole tribes of interesting arachnidæ, so that when we reach the last page we vote it to be one of the healthiest books of the season.

FOR THE SAKE OF A CROWN. By Mrs. Frederick West. 2s. A story of that interesting period of history in the Netherlands, commencing with the death of William the Silent, and taking the reader through the various trials and persecutions consequent on the tyrannic bigotry of Philip the Second. All heresy was punished by "fire, sword, or the pit"; and the faithful Anna, "for the sake of a crown" of glory, endures the last-named torture at the hands of the priests of Spain. The story is deeply interesting, and is well and powerfully told.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray's monthly GOOD COMPANY makes a very entertaining and instructive volume. The Editor is also the largest contributor, and those who know the peculiar quality of Mr. Wray's stories and sermons will not quarrel with this arrangement. (Woodford, Fawcett & Co.)

THE ILLUSTRATED MISSIONARY NEWS. Vol. xxiii. 3s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. These are pages of living interest. The wide world is the field surveyed, but the great needs of the dark nations of the earth are not allowed to hide altogether from view the many claims of our own beloved land. The illustrations present scenes from many climes, and the articles include many instructive selections from general periodical literature.

Archdeacon Farrar's LIFE OF CHRIST is to be reissued by Messrs. Cassell & Co. in halfpenny weekly numbers, commencing January 1.

ILLUSTRATED GUIDE TO CAMBRIDGE. By a Resident Trinity M.A. 6d. Jarrold & Sons. This very serviceable little book contains a street map, with historical sketches of the town and University. The illustrations give a good idea of some of the more important of the public buildings.

The proprietors of The Daily Graphic, the first number of which will be issued on January 4, have prepared a specimen preparatory copy, copiously illustrated. The new venture marks a fresh and important advance in journalistic enterprise, and we anticipate for it the fullest success. We read with pleasure in the Director's letter that the paper "will contain nothing from pen or pencil that a parent would wish to conceal from his family."

Messrs. R. Banks & Sons, Racquet-court, Fleet-street, publish admirable almanacs for the Baptist and Congregational denominations. The issues for 1890 are well brought down to date in the many details which make them so widely useful, especially to church members and others living in London and its suburbs. The almanacs are, in fact, directories, giving a great deal of information regarding church arrangements and work (2d. each).

THE MINISTER'S POCKET DIARY for 1890 embraces many serviceable features. The lists of societies and other information, are what ministers generally require to have at hand, and the sheets for memoranda are well arranged. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.)—THE R.T.S. POCKET-BOOK AND SCRIPTURE CALENDAR (1s. 6d.) presents, in a compact form, a variety of commercial and other information. It is a very useful vade mecum. THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S POCKET BOOK (1s.), also issued by the Religious Tract Society, is well got up, and strongly bound. Daily texts and notes on the months are given.

FATHER CLEMENT. By Grace Kennedy. This story of stirring times has been reproduced as an addition to the "London Series of Penny Life Stories for Old and Young." We trust it will have a large circulation. It is worthy of recollection that this story was the means of the conversion of Sir Edward Denny, Bart., over fifty years ago. The publisher, Mr. A. Holness, has also brought out a new edition of that sterling tract, HOW CAN I BE SAVED? by Heyman WREFORD. Another useful reissue is THE NARRATIVE OF ANDREW DUNN'S CONVERSION BY READING THE NEW TESTAMENT (a penny each).

NEW YEAR BOOKLETS.

We have before us quite a number of these little messengers, suitable for enclosing in letters. In LIVING EPISTLES, Rev. W. Frith makes some good points in bringing out the qualities which should characterise the Christian who would be an "epistle read and known of all men." In STAND AND WITHSTAND, Rev. E. W. Moore gives a timely exhortation to resist the insidious encroachments of unbelief and worldly conformity, and "having done all, to stand." Miss Sophia M. Nugent chooses BEAUTY FOR ASHES as a channel to convey a promise of the Lord's unchanging love. "IS IT PEACE?" is the searching question asked by Mrs. Mary Gorges as a fitting standard by which to gauge our spiritual position. The booklet closes with a very rhythmical little poem upon the same subject. A SILVER TONGUE (Prov. x.20) is the "New Year's wish" of Mrs. Cronyn, expressed in fervent and helpful words. To the unconverted Rev. A. E. Foster asks, "Have you made your will?" and, using the legal simile, presses the question as to what legacy of influence each is leaving to the world. Rev. J. T. Wrenford follows up his last year's message, entitled, "The Christ-Life," by considering SUPPLIES FOR THE CHRIST-LIFE, and his words should prove an encouragement to every reader. All the foregoing are published by Messrs. Partridge & Co. at a penny each, except the last named, which costs 3d. per dozen. WHEN MY SHIP COMES HOME (1d. Marshall Bros.) is "a bright word for the New Year," by Rev. F. S. Webster, M.A., who teaches some helpful lessons upon Hope. Bishop Ryle adds two more to the list of his useful penny pamphlets (Hunt & Co.)—THIS IS FOR YOU and WHAT IS REAL HAPPINESS? Direct and pointed, as the Bishop's shafts always are, these will no doubt stick fast in the hearts of some of the King's enemies.

Evangelistic Notes.

Boston.—Nine of the evangelical churches of the South End, Boston, united in union services, under the direction of Rev. B. Fay Mills. As a result, over 700 persons have manifested a desire to lead a Christian life, in addition to the church members who have been quickened into new spiritual life.

Ceylon.—Recent papers announce the arrival at Colombo of Rev. G. C. Grubb with his mission party, and the opening of their campaign. Mr. Grubb's addresses, both to Christians and the unconverted, have created a strong impression, and there are calls for his services from different parts of the island.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis concluded a seven days' mission at Blandford, Dorset, on Monday last, which has been truly a time of blessing. Many who were careless and indifferent have been aroused, and their attention awakened concerning the importance of Divine things; some souls have crossed "over the line," and are now rejoicing in the Saviour.

Birkenhead.—A week of special meetings for young women has been held by Miss Radcliffe, of Liverpool, at the Y.W.C.A. institute. Her Gospel messages and explanations of the joy of a life wholly consecrated to God have been helpful to many; numerous testimonies have been received of a deeper apprehension of spiritual things. The mission closed with the annual Y.W.C.A. tea, and an address by Miss Radcliffe.

Ireland.—Rev. Jas. Kirkwood has closed a Gospel mission in Roscrea, co. Tipperary, where a very earnest spirit pervades the people, and where a great number of young people decided for Christ. The mission to the masses, conducted in Hermon Hall, Belfast, by Messrs. Johnson and Grubb, has so far resulted in 250 professed conversions. Successful missions have been conducted by Rev. James Stewart in Donaghadee, by Messrs. Kevin and Johnson, in Legeteriffe, co. Antrim, and by Mr. and Mrs. Powers, in Newtownards and Fintona.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has conducted a ten days' mission in the Y.M.C.A. hall at Banff, N.B., and many manifest tokens of Divine blessing have rested on the work. Professing Christians have been much stimulated by the noon addresses on the spiritual life, and led more fully to surrender themselves to the Lord. There have been many cases of spiritual decision among young men, and on Sunday week the large parish church was crowded with an attentive audience, when many remained to the after-meeting. The mission goes on for another six days.

Baildon, near Bradford.—A mission has been conducted in this place by Rev. Dr. Morgan. Women's meetings were held each day by Mrs. Morgan. Besides the usual every-day services, Dr. Morgan gave addresses to children and to men, and also to the mill hands at the various mills in the dinner hour. They assembled quite voluntarily, the women with shawls over their heads, while Dr. Morgan addressed some five hundred men, women, girls, and boys, from a truck in the yard. A good number testified to definite blessing received during the mission.

Finchley.—On Sunday, Dec. 8, Rev. George Wainwright, of Bournemouth, commenced a series of mission services in the Baptist Chapel at East Finchley. The meetings were continued till Thursday, the 12th, and during the week-nights the attendance gradually increased. Among the results of the mission have been the quickening of spiritual life of the members of the church, the decision for Christ of several, and the deep conviction of others. The inquirers and young converts are to form a Young Christians' Band, and to meet every Tuesday evening. Rev. R. Finch (pastor) and his helpers threw themselves earnestly and energetically into the work.

MR. GRAHAM WILMOT BROOKE was married last week at St. Mary's Church, Plaistow, Kent, to Miss Margaret Graham Brooke, only daughter of Rev. Henry E. Brooke, of Bromley.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Exeter intends to require all his candidates for ordination to pass an examination in the history of some foreign mission.

Last week the C.M.S. received offers of service from several Cambridge students, and a party will now be made up to advance into Eastern Equatorial Africa.

A proposal is on foot to start a new organisation under the title of "The Young Sowers' Band," meant to increase the interest in juvenile associations of the C.M.S. where clergy may deem it useful. The agency will be purely parochial.

Rev. F. N. Eden, vicar of St. James's, West Hartlepool, Durham, has resigned his charge, and purposes sailing for the Niger, West Africa, in February. Mr. Eden, who has held the vicarage for about three years, goes out under the Church Missionary Society.

Rev. Dr. Corfe, who is to go to Corea at the sending of the Primate, has given up his post in the navy, with prospects of a snug pension, hoping to live in Corea on £100 a year or thereabouts of his own. The funds of the Mission are to be used for a company of five young clergymen, who will live on a similar sum and devote their lives to the work of the Christian ministry in Corea.

The programme of the Islington clerical meeting, which is to be held on Tuesday, January 14, includes a discussion of the following "Pressing Present-day Subjects":—"The Position of the Old Testament"; "The Hold of Revealed Truth upon the Educated Orders of Society"; "How to Deal with the Unevangelised Masses"; "Home Reunion—Is it Desirable? Is it Possible?" Amongst those expected to take part in the proceedings are the Dean of Canterbury, Archdeacon Taylor, Canons Bell and McCormick, Revs. H. E. Fox, A. Pearson, C. L. Engström, and T. J. Madden.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A series of social tea-meetings is being held at Tolmers-square Church during the winter. An encouraging number of conversions have taken place since Rev. Elwyn Thomas entered upon the pastorate.

Rev. Dr. Jefferis, one of the most popular Congregational ministers in New South Wales, has resigned the pastorate of Pitt-street Church, Sydney, owing to the ill-health of his wife. Dr. Jefferis will shortly leave for England.

Buckland Church, Portsmouth (Rev. W. C. Talbot, pastor), reports an aggregate of 1100 teachers and scholars in the Sunday-school. Forty-six of the scholars have joined the Church during the year. The senior young men's class numbers eighty-one, of whom fifty-seven are members of the Church.

PRESBYTERIAN.

In connection with Brondesbury Presbyterian Church (Rev. R. E. Welsh, pastor) a well-equipped mission has been commenced at Willesden Green.

Rev. William James Lowe, late of Mount Morris, Ireland, was last week inducted at Islington Church, Liverpool, as successor to Rev. Dr. Moore White.

Three English Presbyterian missionaries are about to leave for the East—Rev. William McGregor, returning to Amoy; Rev. William Duffus, to Swatow; and Rev. Archibald Lamont, who is going to labour at Singapore.

The meetings held at Inverness to protest against the heretical character of Dr. Dods's recent writings were largely attended by Presbyterian ministers from different parts of the North of Scotland; the speeches made were uncompromising in tone, and portend future controversy in the highest Church Court—the Free General Assembly.

At a meeting of the Manchester Presbytery last week, Rev. Daniel Neilson, a Primitive Methodist minister, until lately stationed at Farnworth, applied for admission to the Presbyterian ministry. It was stated that Mr. Neilson is not only a godly man, but a scholarly and cultivated man; and that he has for many years done admirable service in the Church.

BAPTIST.

The new chapel at Rumney, the opening of which was recently noticed in these columns, belongs to the mission station of the Tredegarville Baptist Church, Cardiff, by the members of which the money required for its erection was subscribed.

Rev. J. J. Fuller, a coloured missionary from Africa, connected with the Baptist Missionary Society, has been visiting the English Baptist churches in Pembrokeshire on behalf of foreign missions. Unusual interest has been excited the chapels being crowded.

A mission chapel has been opened at Horfield, Bristol, the building being the result of work set on foot by members of the Broadmead Bible-class. Rev. E. G. Gange preached at the opening. It will be carried on in connection with Broadmead Chapel, Bristol.

The report read at the annual meeting of Penge Tabernacle stated that during the year seventy-six members had been added to the church, making a total of over 600 during the eight years' ministry of Rev. J. Wesley Bond. The school and church requiring increased accommodation, it has been decided to erect a new tabernacle on adjacent land, and to use the present building for a Sunday-school.

An interesting, and perhaps unique, feature of the pastorate of Rev. George Duncan, D.D., at Hornsey Rise Chapel, has been his weekly lectures, the total now reaching 125, which have been given in succession without the intermission of a single week, winter or summer. The subjects are various, and are dealt with in an edifying and instructive manner, with a spice of humour which only makes them the more attractive.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

An application has been received from Mdme. Antoinette Sterling, the well-known singer, to join the Society of Friends.

The Friends of Bristol are pushing on a noble crusade against war. By a variety of magic-lantern exhibitions, and accompanying explanatory lectures, given in schoolrooms in and around the city, the public mind is being instructed in the teachings of experience and of the New Testament regarding peace and war. The Peace Society's slides are used.

Worcester and Shropshire Monthly Meeting has just "recorded" Caroline E. Stephen, of Malvern, a minister of the Gospel in the Society of Friends.

Western Quarterly Meeting, held in Gloucester on the 10th and 11th inst., was one of the largest for years past. The question of how to carry the Gospel to the cultured and thoughtful, as well as the poorer and more easily reached classes, occupied much prayerful attention. At a morning prayer meeting all the foreign missionaries were specially remembered. How to introduce a little more of the congregational element and make more use of preparative meetings was discussed in the Quarterly Meeting; and the evening meeting on "Poverty" was one of unusual interest and profit. The breadth of view and ability of the speeches would have done no discredit to any Legislative Assembly, and must have helped in the solution of the great problem.

The women of Madagascar are learning that male and female are all one in Christ, and are coming out side by side with the men in public service for Him. Such news is very encouraging.

METHODIST.

The triumphs of the Gospel in Fiji have excited the envy and lust of conquest of the Roman priesthood, who are giving great anxiety to the Wesleyan missionaries.

A series of Sunday afternoon conferences, on the lines of those conducted at St. James's Hall by Mr. Price Hughes, has been arranged by Rev. J. Surman Cooke for the chapel at Queen's-road, Battersea. They are largely attended by men.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel and Schools at Leighton Buzzard were recently destroyed by fire. The Wesleyans of that town have truly sympathised with the suffering Society. They invited Rev. W. Jones, Primitive Methodist minister, to preach in their large chapel, and handed over the day's collections—£16 17s.—to the treasurer of the New Primitive Methodist Chapel and School Fund.

Rev. R. W. Aitken recently granted the Wesleyans of Paul, Penzance, the use of his parish schoolroom for the purpose of holding their annual missionary meeting. The vicar himself presided at the harmonium, and led the singing. In addressing the meeting, he said he longed to see the time when it would be possible for a Wesleyan minister to preach in Church of England pulpits, and for an Anglican clergyman to occupy the pulpit in a Wesleyan chapel. It was his opinion that there could be unity of spirit and oneness of aim without organic union. Uniformity and amalgamation often meant disunion.

The Primitive Methodists' "Forward Movement" in London was formally inaugurated a few days ago at a great meeting held in the Driffield-road Church, North Bow. Addresses were delivered by Mr. George Hand, Revs. Dr. Lunn, Joseph Toulson, Thomas Guttery, J. Travis, and T. Pinnock. It is intended to employ a number of special agents to carry on evangelistic services, house-to-house visitation, and other forms of aggressive enterprise, in order to reach the neglected masses of the population. Some of the present buildings possessed by the Connexion in London will be used where there is a suitable sphere and prospect of successful work, while the committee will endeavour to open new centres of effort in dense populations, or in some of the new neighbourhoods of the Metropolis.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A successful meeting of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland has been held in Belfast.

Mrs. Tillie, of Duncreggan, has given £5000 for the erection of a hall for the Y.W.C.A., Londonderry.

The Commercial Travellers' Christian Association is doing a good work. The Irish branch, which has only been a short time in existence, has forty-four members. Bibles have been placed in the bedrooms of two hotels, and libraries have been established in several.

The intelligence has been received in connection with Irish Presbyterian missions in India, of the conversion and baptism of an educated Brahmin and of a Koli. Three young Jews have professed Christ in Hamburg, in connection with Irish Presbyterian Continental Missions.

A most successful Missionary Conference, in connection with the Presbyterian Church, was held last week in Belfast. There is a growing missionary spirit in Ireland, as is evidenced by the fact that conferences of this sort are being held now throughout the country with great success.

The Society which carries on home mission work among the blind in Belfast, and of which Mrs. Pim is secretary, deserves encouragement. It employs two Bible-women, who paid nearly 3000 visits during the past year, and also held several meetings; 220 blind persons of various denominations are on its books.

The Presbyterian Commission, which met in Belfast last week, sanctioned the establishment of a mission to the Jungle tribes of India. They decided that while applications from men who have had a full college course shall be welcomed, a college training should not be deemed a sine qua non, and that applicants who have given evidence of devotion to Christ shall be eligible.

NOTES FROM SCOTLAND.

On Sunday week Dr. Pierson opened his campaign i the West of Scotland by addressing three large congr gations in Glasgow—Camphill United Presbyteria Barony Established (Dr. Marshall Lang's), and Free S Matthew's. On Monday he had crowded meetings i the Christian Institute and St. Andrew's Hall, and ha since visited Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, and other town in the district.

Rev. Dr. William Boyd, late of Forest Hill, Londo and Rev. George Robson, Inverness, have been ap pointed by the Mission Board of the United Presby terian Church of Scotland to visit their stations i Jamaica, and they sailed from Southampton last week The U.P. Church has occupied this mission field sinc 1831. The mission has met with great success, as ther are now on the island forty-six churches and sixtee stations, with a membership of 9,131, and nearly 8,00 children attending the Sunday and day-schools. Th churches are largely self-supporting.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Rev. Jas. White, Presbyterian minister, Carrickfergus —Rev. Alex. Savage, Presbyterian minister, Jerretz' Pass, co. Armagh.—In California, Mr. Granville P Beauchamp (a son of Lady Beauchamp), who has been evangelising along with Mr. G. B. Studd in America.— Rev. John Garwood, formerly for many years clerical secretary of the London City Mission.—Rev. David James, minister of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Church, St. Mellon's, Cardiff.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

Some Wesleyan ministers have excused their non-observance of Temperance Sunday on the plea that Conference only "recommends" on the subject, does not command.

Under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A., Mr. E. T. Smith, well known as an elocutionist, has conducted a four days' Gospel temperance mission in the Town Hall, Sligo. Mr. Smith has also held a similar mission in Newry.

The Northern Advance utters a protest against treating employés, public or private, to drink at Christmastide or the New Year. One day's "friendly" treating has brought a dark cloud over many a humble home that might otherwise have been bright and merry.

The temperance party in Wales have determined on an active Parliamentary propaganda. Their plans include the passing of a Bill revoking the bonâ fide traveller clause in the Sunday Closing Act; the bringing of clubs within the scope of the law; and early closing on Saturday nights.

The Bishop of Peterborough, in an article in The Fortnightly Review, on betting and gambling, touches on the drink question, and says he will believe in the honesty of Local Option votes in the House of Commons when that House has applied the principle to its own precincts, and abolished the sale of liquor at the refreshment bar.

Some time ago, at Coventry, it fell to Mr. Charles Flower, the brewer, to propose the health of Lord Leigh, lord-lieutenant of the county. In replying, his lordship said he never felt better in his life, and it was due to his having, a few years ago, adopted the advice of Mr. Flower's father, to abstain from all spirituous liquors.

At the recent Munster Winter Assizes Mr. Justice Murphy said that drink was the cause of seven-eights of the crime dealt with. All the judges have the same story to tell. Yet the Church has not thoroughly awakened to a sense of her responsibility in the matter both of example and counsel. A few days ago Mr. Eustace stated that if the Sunday Closing Act were passed the workers in the Dublin Prison Gate Mission might cease their work.

FOREIGN.

The state of Zanzibar town after dark is becoming very dangerous owing to the large number of drinking shops, drunken and riotous Europeans, and the inefficiency of the native police to cope with the evil.

As a method of raising a revenue from vice (says Miss Willard) high licence is a success, and it is equally so as a life insurance policy on the saloon. It arrays the expert and non-expert temperance forces against each other, and makes of a man's household his worst foes. It has set back the temperance cause ten years if not a generation; it has blinded men's consciences to moral distinctions, deadened the churches, muzzled the clergy, chloroformed the religious editor, and rejoiced the devil and his hosts.

THE ANCIENT MERCHANTS' LECTURES.—Rev. Newman Hall has delivered a series of six lectures under this trust in Finsbury Chapel, City. In one word, the theme was Christ and Him crucified. The chronic deficiency in the expenses fund is at the present time seriously threatening the discontinuance of the time-honoured Merchants' Lecture. It is very desirable that the managers should be able to reckon upon more annual subscriptions, to supplement the small endowment from Coward's trust, and make up the sum of £150, estimated to be annually required to meet the necessary expenditure. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. K. Wilson, Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, E.C.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

These Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible & Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas Richardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of whom card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, prepared by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our readers will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," and take its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, DEC. 22.—1 Chron. II.

THE genealogy has been traced down to Israel (i. 34), and was then interrupted in order to give the sons of Esau. In this chapter the chronicler begins again with Israel, and after naming the twelve sons of Israel (1, 2), gives the line of descent.

I. From Judah to David (3—17).—The tribe of Judah is honoured with the first mention, not only for the sake of David, but for the sake of David's Son and Lord. It is interesting to notice the different characters of those through whom the Saviour came. Er, Onan (3), and Achan (7) were notoriously evil, so that, not only during his life, and at his death, but even in his descent our Lord "was numbered with the transgressors." The four sons of Zerah (6) are called sons of Mahol in 1 Kings iv. 31, where they are referred to as famous for wisdom. Jesse had eight sons (1 Sam. xvii. 12), but only seven are given here. Let us admire the wisdom and the grace of grace of God in giving us such a record as this. That the Messiah should descend from Abraham, and through Judah, had long since been predicted (Gen. xlix. 10). This apparently uninteresting record proves how accurately God fulfils his word.

II. Other descendants of Judah (18—55).—The line of David descended through Ram, the son of Hezron (9, 10). The posterity of the two other sons of Hezron is given here—of Caleb (18—20 and 42—49), and of Jerahmeel (25—41). We meet here with Bezaleel (20), employed in erecting the Tabernacle (Exod. xxxi. 2) with the sons of Jair (22, 23), whose achievement is mentioned in Numb. xxxii. 40; with many who were blessed with both sons and daughters; with one who had daughters, but no sons (34); and with one who died without children (30). Children are blessings which the Lord gives according to his will. In some cases the pedigree terminates in a place (50, 51), probably that which they possessed after the division of the land.

MONDAY, DEC. 23.—1 Chron. III.

Among the sons of David (1—9) is one called Daniel (1), elsewhere named Chileab (2 Sam. iii. 3). We may assume that both names belonged to him, and may conclude that the fact of one person sometimes having two names may explain some of the apparent discrepancies in these genealogies. Eglah (3) is supposed to be Michal, and is called emphatically "his wife." Is not the very title a Scriptural testimony in favour of monogomy, even in times when polygamy was the rule? Solomon, though the eldest of the sons of Bathsheba (5), is mentioned last, because the genealogy was to be taken up again from him (10). Is there a history of family bereavement suggested by the appearance twice of the names of Elishama and Eliphelet (6—8)? Possibly these two names were borne by the two first born, and were afterwards given to others, because the two first born had died.

The line of David is continued through Solomon (10—16). Note other cases in which two names apply to the one person. The list is a very suggestive one as the characters of those mentioned are recalled. It is difficult to understand how such godly sons could issue from men so notoriously wicked as Ahaz and Manasseh; and that such fathers as Hezekiah and Josiah should have children so entirely opposite to themselves. Hezekiah prayed for lengthened life; but in those fifteen added years Manasseh was born, who filled Jerusalem with innocent blood. Yet grace abounded over sin, and the goodness of God led Manasseh to repentance. Note a solemn warning against the consequences of sin. In Solomon the kingdom was at its highest point of magnificence and glory; but as his successors sinned, the glory of the kingdom declined, until God's people were scattered among the heathen.

The descendants of David after the captivity (17—24) include some names with which we shall meet again, notably that of Zerubbabel (19). But the list is chiefly valuable as showing the care with which the genealogy of David was preserved. The Spirit of God kept in view the coming of the promised Messiah, who could only be received as such as He was proved to have descended from David.

TUESDAY, DEC. 24.—1 Chron. IV.

The posterity of Judah is continued first, through Shobal (1—4). The term Zorahites (2) is derived from the place Zoreah (ii. 53, and Josh. xv. 33), where some of this tribe settled. In the same sense the term "father of Bethlehem" (4) is used.

The line is continued through Ashur (5—8); and is interrupted by the mention of Jabez (9—10). Of this man we know nothing more than is here recorded. His parent's names are not given, but we conclude that he was connected with this branch of Judah's posterity. His mother associated with him the sorrow which attended his birth. God has made his name to suggest very different thoughts. He was evidently a man of prayer. Note what he prayed for, and the spirit in which his prayer was presented, as suggested by the margin. Note also that God gave him his request. Such an interruption in the midst of these names intimates the special delight which God has in a man of prayer. With greater meaning than was possible to him, we can make the prayer of Jabez our own.

The descent is continued through Chelub (11—20), in whose line occurs the honourable name of Caleb (14). The man who followed the Lord fully (Numb. xiv. 24) is fittingly mentioned after Jabez, the man of prayer. Here are two characters worthy our imitation.

There are interesting suggestions connected with the sons of Shelah (21—23). From him came "the families of them that wrought fine linen" (21). Of what an apparently insignificant industry the Spirit of God takes note! During the prosperity of David, and for some time afterwards, his family held dominion in Moab. The chronicler records this with a sigh of regret. Is not this the meaning of his remark, "These are ancient things" (22)? They who once ruled are now potters and gardeners (23). But if we may do any service, however lowly, and may "dwell with the King" for the doing of it, we may count it our highest honour. All depends upon the King for and with whom the work is done.

The sons of Simeon (24—43) did not multiply as the tribe of Judah had done (27). Jacob had solemnly pronounced a curse upon them (Gen. xlix. 5—7). Yet increase was granted to one part of the tribe (38).

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 25.—1 Chron. V.

This chapter gives the genealogy of the two tribes and a half who chose their inheritance on the east side of Jordan. The sons of Reuben (1—10). Though the first-born of Israel, Reuben forfeited his birthright in consequence of his sin (1). The results of sin always extend to others than the person committing it. The descendants of Reuben lost much through their father's transgression. The birthright was given to Joseph (1, 2); while the tribe of Judah excelled all others as the royal tribe (2). The children of Gad (11—17), whose genealogy was reckoned in the days of Jotham, and of Jeroboam II. (17). And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh (23—26). These two tribes and a half united against the Hagarites—the Ishmaelites, dwelling in Arabia. This war took place in the days of Saul (10), and is fully described (18—22). The description is deserving of study. Note (a) the qualifications of the men (18). Valiant; able to use defensive and offensive weapons; skilful in war. We may seek the best possible qualifications for serving our Lord. (b) The method of their warfare (30). Their trust was in God—not in their own valour and skill. Not only before the battle, but "in the battle, they cried to the Lord." To be in spirit on our knees while facing the Lord's enemies is the way to victory. They "were helped." Great as their own resources were, God did not leave them to themselves. The best qualified servants, without Him, are helpless. Similar dependence upon God will secure similar help.

But these tribes had chosen a dangerous position for their habitation (25). They were on the border of their heathen neighbours, whose idolatries they soon learned, hence the judgment (26). Borderland Christians may beware. To keep near to God, and as far as possible from the world, is the only way of safety.

THURSDAY, DEC. 26.—1 Chron. VI.

Here we have the genealogy of Levi—the priestly tribe. The first fathers of the tribe are mentioned (1—3); and then the succession of priests, from Aaron down to the Captivity (4—15). Among these special mention is made of Azariah (10). Others executed the priest's office in Solomon's Temple; but his service was rendered with special fidelity; for he valiantly withstood the impious presumption of King Uzziah (2 Chron. xxvi. 17, 18). God is not unrighteous to forget any faithful service. These priests were sons of Kohath (2).

Other families of the Levites follow (16—30); then the Chronicles describes, first, the work of the Levites (31—48); and next, the work of the priests (49—53). The service of song is specially mentioned as the work of the Levites (31—32); and for this there were three principal leaders—Heman descended from Kohath (33—38), seems to have been the most prominent, and to have occupied the centre; Asaph, descended from Gershom (39—43), stood on his right hand; and Etham (called Jeduthan, ix. 16) descended from Merari, was on the left (44—47).

The priestly service included that of the most holy place, which belonged only to Aaron and his successors in the office of High Priest (49). Our great High Priest in the heavenlies is the antitype of Aaron, while we may share with Him in priestly work, as the sons of Aaron shared the honours of service with him. Our highest privilege is connected with our position as a kingdom of priests.

Significantly the cities of refuge, in which the Levites dwelt, are called their castles (54). In a very special manner they were taken under the care of God. Every dwelling-place—however frail—becomes a castle if God defends it. Let us make Him our habitation, and "no evil shall befall" us (Ps. xci. 9, 10). The cities were scattered among the various tribes of Israel (54—81); which may be regarded as a fulfilment of the prophecy spoken by Jacob (Gen. xlix. 7). Yet note that what was first mentioned as a curse became a blessing: for in every tribe there were those called to teach God's law to the people. In this scattering of the teachers among the people, is there not an example worthy of our imitation?

FRIDAY, DEC. 27.—1 Chron. VII.

The sons of Issachar (1—5).—The numbering in the days of David (2) was that recorded in 2 Sam. xxiv. The characters of some as valiant men is specially noted (2, 5).

The descendants of Benjamin (6—12).—Only three of Benjamin's sons are mentioned, probably because the families of the other sons were extinct. Again, note that their valour and fitness for battle are specially recorded (7, 9, 11).

Naphtali and Manasseh (13, 19).—Among the descendants of Manasseh we meet with the name of Zelophehad, whose daughters so successfully sued for an inheritance (Numb. xxvi. 1—7). Here, too, we meet with Bedan (17), probably the same who was mentioned in 1 Sam. xii. 11, of whom nothing is known, except that he was one of the deliverers whom God sent to Israel.

Ephraim's descendants (20—29).—These suffered a reverse at the hands of the Philistines (21), which seemed as though the promise of God that they should have a numerous increase was not to be fulfilled. So does God's providence sometimes seem to contradict his promises, only in order to give a more glorious fulfilment in the end. The consolation immediately followed the grief (22, 23).

The sons of Asher (30—40).—Again note how God records the character of those who were conspicuous for valour and skill. Let us seek to be workers who need not be ashamed.

SATURDAY, DEC. 28.—1 Chron. VIII.

The tribe of Benjamin has been mentioned before (vii. 6), but is more fully treated here, in order to introduce the family of Saul, and because this tribe, being associated with Judah after the revolt of Jeroboam, and during the Babylonish captivity, also returned from captivity in great numbers with the tribe of Judah. Of some it is specially noted after the return from captivity that they dwelt in Jerusalem (28, 32). It was an honourable thing to choose that position of danger at such a time. God has kept their names in perpetual remembrance in his Word. Much more honourable is it to be a citizen of the heavenly Jerusalem, and to have our names written in the Lamb's book of life.

The family of Saul (33—40) includes names with which are associated interesting and sad memories. The lessons of that life, in which the early promise was so utterly contradicted by the lamentable failure, cannot be too frequently recalled. Though God setteth up one and putteth down another, we are reminded that He does not act in any arbitrary fashion. It is disobedience like Saul's that leads to similar failure.

Appeals.

Appeals still flow in upon us, and we are compelled to confine each to a few lines.

Mr. W. Edwin Page, secretary of The London Female Penitentiary and Guardian Society, 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, London, N., asks for a share in the Christmas bounty. It trains, feeds, and clothes erring young women; procures respectable situations; provides outfits and rewards faithfulness in duty by suitable encouragement.

The brothers T. and J. Young, of the Working Men's Mission, New Cut, appeal for help on behalf of the soup kitchen, Christmas gifts to the deserving poor, and Christmas entertainment to 900 children of the New Cut and district. Address, 32, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

Mr. John Anderson, 45, Sharsted-street, Kennington Park, S.E., has arranged with a number of Christian young men to visit some of the London slums on Christmas morning, and asks for books, cards, clothes, or anything suitable for distribution among the poor.

Mr. William Smith, 30, Warren-road, Folkestone, asks for help to give a dinner to tramps, with Gospel meeting after, on Boxing Day.

The Gee-street Mission and Ragged Schools (late Bell Alley), Goswell-road, E.C., has been carried on for about twenty-five years for the benefit of the poor of St. Luke's. Funds are needed to support the various operations. The hon. superintendent is Mr. Henry Rudgley, 29, Falcon-square, E.C.

Mr. William Catlin, of the Cow Cross Mission, 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, N., asks for help to sustain his Children's Dinner Fund. During the five winter months he provides about 600 dinners per week, for which the children pay one halfpenny, though the actual cost is five times as much. He also wishes to give Christmas dinners to deserving families.

The vicar and churchwardens of St. Andrew's, Lambeth, request help in money or clothing to relieve cases of distress in a poor population.—Rev. Trevor Fielder, 108, Stamford-street, S.E.

Mr. Samuel Rayson, secretary of the Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows (32, Sackville-street, W.), states that the Society has been in existence over sixty years, and has granted relief to thousands of destitute widows. Contributions are greatly needed.

Mr. Edward W. Thomas, 200, Euston-road, N.W., appeals for donations in aid of his work. The year's history, both of the Preventive and Reformatory Homes under his care, has been a most encouraging one, and the committee have had no reason to regret their decision to receive all suitable cases, irrespective of fluctuations of income. Mr. Thomas will be glad to receive contributions.

Rev. Thomas Jackson, of Clapton Park Tabernacle (41, Powerscroft-road, Lower Clapton, E.), says they are supplying upwards of 400 free breakfasts to the poorest children selected by the Board School teachers; also 600 quarts of soup for the poor, weekly. Help in other forms is given to the destitute. Assistance will be gratefully received.

Mr. Thomas Pocock, Hon. Secretary of the Royal Blind Pension Society of the United Kingdom (235, Southwark Bridge-road, London, S.E.), writes:—We are paying £4000 yearly to 590 persons to whom blindness means desperate poverty, in sums ranging from 10s. to 25s. per month. Two hundred and fifty others, known to be worthy, seek our help, which only the want of funds causes us to withhold. We appeal for the support of all having sympathy with the blind poor.

The British Home for Incurables appeals for contributions in aid of the funds of the charity, from which, besides providing for the inmates of the Home, over £6000 a year is distributed among 300 incurable sufferers in all parts of the United Kingdom. The secretary is Mr. R. G. Salmond, 73, Cheapside, E.C.

Mrs. Wm. Noble, Ashfield, Seven Sisters-road, Finsbury-park, N., earnestly appeals for help in relieving the necessities of poor women and children at Hoxton hall, at Christmas. Gifts of warm clothing, books, toys, money, &c., will be most gratefully received.

The work of the Ben Jonson Mission is among the very poor of East London. Funds are at present urgently needed to provide free meals.—James Taylor, superintendent, 28, Cressy-place, Stepney-green, E.

"After Care Association for Poor and Friendless Female Convalescents on Leaving Asylums for the Insane."—There are in the Lunatic Asylums in England and Wales about 30,000 women; of these a large number are discharged in the course of the year recovered. The objects of the Association are to facilitate the re-admission of these poor people into social life. Funds much wanted. Secretary, H. Thornhill Roxby, Arden Lea, The Drive, Walthamstow, Essex.

M. G. Barbier, superintendent of the French Evangelical Mission, knows what it is to labour among the poor. He asks for soup and coal-tickets, and other help. M. Barbier's address is 10, Charlotte-street, Portland-place, W.

Help will be thankfully received towards the Shoreditch Iron Room Mission. The poor cry for comfort. J. Knowles, 21, Benthal-road, Stoke Newington, N.

Special contributions are solicited towards providing a Christmas dinner and winter clothing for the poor deaf and dumb who attend the services held under the auspices of the Dublin Protestant Deaf and Dumb Association, No. 21 Room, Metropolitan Hall, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin. The missionary is Mr. M. F. G. Hewson.

Mr. C. Wickerson, The Green, Winchmore Hill, N., writes: "In our little chapel at Southgate we have a lot of aged people and some very poor. We very much want to help them this Christmas."

The work at Blackthorn-street Chapel, Bow Common, E., proceeds cheerily, under the direction of Mr. T. J. Hazzard, who writes: "I am hoping to give some fifty widows, and as many workingmen with families, a Christmas dinner; also about 250 of the poor 'drift' children a good meal. Funds, and gifts for the mothers' meeting, and other departments of the work, will be gladly received."

Help is earnestly solicited on behalf of the Christmas Offering Fund for the Assistance of Ladies in Reduced Circumstances. The fund provides employment where possible. Donations, orders for work, and any assistance, will be greatly valued. The need is pressing, and the administration warmly commended by Christian workers. Particulars from Miss Smallwood, The Lees, Great Malvern.

"Misery and starvation," writes Mr. E. H. Kerwin, of the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, "is before many of the people of East London. We intend again to brighten Christmas Day by sending dinners into our back streets and alleys, so that hundreds will be fed who would otherwise go without. Every case will be investigated, and every penny sent will be spent in food." Donations to Mr. F. N. Charrington, at the Hall.

Last year, fourteen hundred poor people were made glad by dinners and teas, given in connection with the Mission Hall, Fraser-street, Chiswick, friends having supplied the needful funds. It is hoped to repeat the effort this year. Mr. David Tweddle, Orford House, The Hall, Chiswick, is the treasurer.

It is proposed to provide tea for 250 of the children attending the school of the Boleyn Mission, East Ham, E. The general work calls for outside help. Mr. J. Comley Page, Queen's-square, Upton-park, E., is the hon. superintendent.

Mr. Spurgeon, sending "Christmas salutations" to the supporters of the Stockwell Orphanages, says: "We have no need to plead destitution; our Father supplies our wants before we even begin to feel the pinch of them. A gentle hint to our loving friends has at all times been sufficient. This card comes to you as that gentle messenger."

The workers of the Lambeth Ragged School Society, Newport-street, Lambeth-walk, S.E., are anxious again to give a Christmas dinner to 400 of the very poorest of the district, and tea to 600 other children attending the school. Address Mr. E. Nicholls, 106, Leathwaite-road, Clapham Common, S.W.

Liverpool "Robins" are to have a feast again this year, all being well. Mrs. Birt, of the Sheltering Home, Myrtle-street, writes: "All things are planned, and it only remains for friends to come forward with their gifts." It is hoped, for a short time at least, to brighten the lives of 5000 of the poorest little ones of the city.

An appeal is made by the Hackney Juvenile Mission to enable it to give some good cheer to 400 or 500 children, and to carry on a beneficent work by means of Sunday services, free teas, soup-kitchen, Band of Hope, &c. Parcels of clothes would be very acceptable. Fuller information on application to Mr. Frederick E. Tozer, 220, Evering-road, Clapton, N.E.

Mr. J. Davidge, of Paddington Hall, 90, Chu street, Paddington Green, W., asks for co-opera in supplying the needs of the poor at this se and in rescue work among fallen women.

Mr. R. Holme, of the Gospel Union Taberna Snell's Park, Upper Edmonton, writes: "We trying to get in enough money to give a free m to 200 poor women on New Year's Day, and to children on the day following. Our people, tho poor, are doing what they can, but we need outs help." Mr. Holme's address is 1, Fore-str Upper Edmonton.

International S.S. Lessons.

Sunday Afternoon, December 29.

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER'S LESSONS.

THE lessons of this quarter cover a period eighty years' and include the reigns of David a Solomon. The early life of David, and his years exile through the jealousy of Saul, were an exc lent preparation for his reign. Note how strang God trains his servants for positions He desig them to fill.

At the commencement of his reign he displa great ability as a king, uniting the ten tribes, a subduing the nation's enemies. Jerusalem w conquered, and became the religious as well as t civil centre. David knew that a nation's prosper was impossible without piety.

Yet, in the height of his prosperity, David fe The fifty-first and thirty-second Psalms record t bitterness of David's soul-suffering in consequen of his sin. The succeeding history of David sho how terribly God witnessed against his sin severe chastisements. David sowed the se thoughtlessly and carelessly, but the painf reaping followed. Even a child of God, howev privileged and blest, cannot sin without sufferin David's very sins repeated themselves in his ow household.

The reign of Solomon began with much promis He was only about eighteen or twenty years o when his father died. His wise choice secured f him wisdom and riches and honour beyond wha any other man ever possessed; so that his fam spread far and wide. Recall his building of th Temple and the dedicatory service, the visit of th Queen of Sheba and the lesson Jesus teache through her. In Solomon's days the kingdo reached the highest point of magnificence an power. So much the more terrible was his fal Remember how it commenced; to what gros idolatries it led; and how severely it was punished

But both these reigns point to that referred to i the Golden Text. The true King was referred t in David's last words, and was in some sense fore shadowed in Solomon. He has come, and hi righteous kingdom is already set up. Ever disciple of Jesus calls Him King. It is as H reigns in us that there is peace within; and in du time the long-promised visible kingdom shal appear; and "the kingdoms of this world shal become the kingdom of our God and of his Christ." Let every scholar see to it that the kingdom is in Him now.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Various loan missionary exhibitions, which have been held up and down the country, have met with such success, and have been recognised as having such a potent influence in arousing interest in the work of evangelising the heathen, that it is under consideration to hold a Missionary Exhibition on a large scale in London during May, 1891. It is hoped by this means to raise funds for a permanent Missionary Museum at Salisbury-square, a scheme which has been contemplated for several years past. It is also proposed to repeat the February "Simultaneous Meetings" in 1891.

THE AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—Mr. J. T. Morton, of Caterham Valley, has generously repeated the kindness of former Christmas seasons, and in a way which cannot but be specially acceptable to the pensioners. Each has received a present of flannel, and a pair of blankets has been given to all who have not previously shared in a similar benefaction. Half a ton of coals, and a box of groceries, are now on their way to each of them. There are now 1200 of these aged pensioners, living in all parts of the United Kingdom, and the expenditure amongst them in pensions amounts to £7800 per annum. The secretary is Mr. J. E. Hazelton, 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

MAJOR AND MRS. POOLE have been labouring at Witney in Gospel and temperance work, with much acceptance and good results.

THE RESIGNATION AND WITHDRAWAL of Mr. Bradlaugh from the active Infidel propaganda, coupled with the fact of Mrs. Besant's breaking away from Atheism, is a tremendous and staggering blow for aggressive Infidelity. The withdrawal of these two leaders from the movement will leave a gap in the ranks of the Atheists which it will be impossible to fill up. God-speed that day when the gangrene of Infidelity shall curse the minds and morals of Londoners no more.—The Light of the World.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission by Mr. R. Cairns, of the Evangelisation Society, at the Baptist Chapel, Corpe Mullen, Wimborne, Dorset, from Jan. 5 to 19.——For blessing on special services at Great Chesterford, Essex, by Mr. Somerset Gardner, commencing Dec. 20.——For blessing on a fortnight's mission at Plumstead, commencing at the end of this month.——For blessing on closing week of mission at Brightwell, Wallingford, Berks., conducted by J. C. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society.

THE BRETON BIBLE.—The President of the French Republic recently accepted a copy of the Bible in the Breton language, the first and only translation into that tongue. CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" NURSERY LAMP FOOD WARMERS.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

NERVOUS EXHAUSTION.

PULVERMACHER'S WORLD-FAMED GALVANIC BELTS, for the cure of NERVOUS DISEASES, have received Testimonials from three Physicians to Her Majesty the Queen and the leading Physicians of Nine London Hospitals, including Forty Members of the Royal College of Physicians of London.

The distressing symptoms of NERVOUS EXHAUSTION, Loss of MUSCULAR POWER, RHEUMATISM, SCIATICA, PARALYSIS, EPILEPSY, &c., are speedily removed by means of Pulvermacher's World-famed Galvanic Belts, which convey the electric current direct to the affected parts, gradually stimulating and strengthening all the nerves and muscles, and speedily arresting all symptoms of premature waste and decay.

Dr. C. HANDFIELD JONES, F.R.C.P., F.R.S., Physician to St. Mary's Hospital, says: "I am satisfied that Mr. PULVERMACHER is an honest and earnest labourer in the field of science, and I think he deserves to meet with every encouragement from the profession and scientific men."

Dr. H. A. ALLBUTT, M.R.C.P., 24, Park Square, Leeds, writes, October, 1888: "I always recommend with confidence Mr. PULVERMACHER'S BELTS. Ladies recovering from illness incidental to their sex will find these BELTS of vast assistance in restoring lost nerve power."

For Full Price List and Particulars, see New Pamphlet, "GALVANISM: NATURE'S CHIEF RESTORER OF IMPAIRED VITAL ENERGY." Post free from

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

HÆMORRHAGE and PHTHISIS.—CASE of a YOUNG LADY at MALMESBURY.

[This is a highly interesting case to me, and will be to any who are acquainted with patients suffering from this form of phthisis. The difficulty of treating it is in general very great. The frequent recurrence of bleeding is a formidable symptom, every fresh outbreak reducing the patient's strength, and pulling down what has been builded with much care.]

It is just over two years since Miss K. I. BENNETT, a governess at Malmesbury, put herself under my treatment. There had been Consumption and Asthma in the family. She had had five attacks of bleeding from the lungs, with cough and painful oppression of the breathing. For about five months she had found her strength failing, and was rapidly wasting.

She commenced the medicine as directed. At once the bleeding ceased. She felt stronger, but working hard at study kept her from progressing as rapidly as she might have done.

Four months passed. She writes:—"No return of hæmorrhage; I feel much stronger...I am sure by God's blessing it will save my life."

She continued on according to my urgent advice. She had a slight relapse twice through overwork, but ultimately recovered.

I have just received a letter from her (Nov. 5). She says:—"With deep gratitude I write and thank you for the benefit which, under God's blessing, I have received from you. I have had no return of hæmorrhage since I left off the medicine eight months ago. I can walk seven miles, and have continued my teaching. I should recommend all sufferers from chest disease to you. You can make my case known if you think proper. That God's blessing may prosper all your work is the prayer of K. I. B.—Bristol-street, Malmesbury."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR

That BROWN & POLSON'S CORN FLOUR possesses very valuable qualities as a food for all classes, at all periods of life except earliest infancy, has been attested by eminent dietetic authorities, as well as by universal public experience during over thirty years.

Interested attempts to set aside these facts in favour of other foods only appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and it remains true that no other kind of food can serve the special purposes of Corn Flour.

"THE MERCIES OF GOD."

THIS season of family reunions, and the close of another year, turn all our hearts back to review "the mercies of God." Has He not encompassed us about with songs of deliverance? Can we not say, "There failed not aught of any good thing which the Lord had spoken: . . . all came to pass"? Has He not pitied us with more than a father's pity, and comforted us with more than a mother's love? Do not our souls instinctively inquire,

"WHAT SHALL I RENDER unto the Lord for all His benefits?"

Dear friends, suffer me suggestively to remind you of the fatherless, motherless, homeless, joyless, precious young lives, of whom, as truly as of any of your own treasured darlings, Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me, . . . for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

"THE WAIFS AND STRAYS"

A THANKOFFERING

of even a small sum ("Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, not grudgingly, or of necessity, for God loveth a cheerful giver"), will surely be a well pleasing sacrifice to God, and, with His blessing, bear fruit in the temporal and eternal welfare of many Boys and Girls for whose sake the Redeemer was made a little lower than the angels, and "offered Himself" to God.

Yours very faithfully,

J. W. Offord

ANXIETY OF SOUL. — Any to whom the way of salvation is not clear, are invited to communicate, either personally or by letter, to W. S., care of Evangelistic Secretary, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

THE BENEVOLENT OR STRANGERS' FRIEND SOCIETY.

Treasurer, Ald. Sir R. N. Fowler, Bart., M.P.
J. H. Anderson, Esq., Chairman.
Clarence Smith, Esq., J.P., Hon. Secretary.

Funds are especially needed at this Season.

This Society has been in active operation for 104 years. Its 240 Christian voluntary agents pay, on an average, 2,000 visits monthly in relieving the sick poor of London. Kindly remember the work in testamentary arrangements.

Office of the Society, 52, Finsbury Pavement, E.C.

THE FRENCH VAUDOIS IN THE HIGH ALPS are now in danger of perishing of cold and hunger from the general exhaustion of the scanty soil. A solution of the problem how to deliver them has at last been found, namely, by removing them in detachments to Algeria. The first experiment has succeeded. The entire cost is £160 per family, to be refunded for following detachments. The Paris Committee have now £1,000 in hand towards transporting the next band of 20 families. An earnest appeal is made by them to British Christians for help.

At the request of the Paris Committee, Dr. Gustave Monod, President, and with the warm approval of the Dean of Ripon, President of the Lyons Committee, donations will be thankfully received by Donald Matheson, Esq., 130, Queen's-gate, London; or may be paid to Messrs. Barclay, Ransom & Co., 1, Pall Mall East, London, account of FRENCH VAUDOIS FUND.

ASHLEY MISSION, BETHNAL GREEN.—Help is earnestly asked to assist the poor of this Mission, with bread, coals, &c. Cast-off clothing thankfully received. A large Mothers' Meeting, and various classes held every evening.—Miss BONTEIN, 22A, Devonshire-street, Portland-place, W.

HELPING THE DESTITUTE.—Cast-off clothing, provisions, or cash will be thankfully received by the Rev. THOMAS JACKSON, 41, Powerscroft-road, Clapton, London, E., to help in Relief work among the destitute, free meals to poor children attending Board Schools, soup kitchen, and other benevolent agencies. Offerings entrusted to us will be prudently and impartially distributed.

SEAMAN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY. — President: GEORGE WILLIAMS, Esq.—Funds are urgently needed to meet deficit of £600, owing to enlargement of Work and purchase of additional Sailor's Rest. Contributions thankfully received by GEORGE JOHN HILL, 255, Burdett-road, London, E.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

POOR OF ST. LUKE'S AND CLERKENWELL. — PHILIP GAST, 12, Noel-street, Islington (Minister of Spencer-place Chapel for 28 years), pleads for the Widow and Fatherless and the nearly starving Poor. Clothing, boots, blankets, and money will be gladly acknowledged.

A MONTHLY MESSENGER FOR HUMBLE HOMES.

Well suited for General Distribution, and especially adapted for Giving Away to the Working Classes, both Cottager and Artisan.

TO TRACT DISTRIBUTORS.

The attention of Tract Distributors is invited to "THE HERALD OF MERCY," Issued Monthly, Price One Halfpenny.

"THE HERALD OF MERCY" gives—what is so much needed by Tract Distributors—a constant variety of awakening Gospel Appeals, Invitations, and Encouragements. The Subscriber for the Year is thus enabled to furnish every month to the persons in his or her District a complete change of reading and religious instruction.

Every Number of "THE HERALD OF MERCY" has a LARGE AND STRIKING ILLUSTRATION, and three smaller Engravings. This makes the Publication very acceptable and attractive both to young and old; and many who would refuse an ordinary Tract gladly take this paper. It is printed in a good clear type, so as to be easily read.

"THE HERALD OF MERCY" is suitable alike for House to House Visitation; for a Loan Tract; for giving away; for circulation in Hospitals, Infirmaries, and Workhouses; for distribution to Soldiers in Barracks, Sailors in Port, Agricultural Labourers, Mechanics, Factory Workers, and others—and in fact for circulation in any and all the channels for which Tracts are usually required.

"THE HERALD OF MERCY" is supplied as follows:—

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"The Christian who desires to give a bit of good reading along with a word in season to any fellow-traveller by road, rail, or river, could not do better than lay in a stock of this periodical. It costs only a halfpenny; but its contents are of a high spiritual quality, fitted to awaken the careless, and to lead to decision."—Christian Leader.

"As bright and attractive as could be desired. Full of good matter and effective Illustrations. Abundantly worthy of a wide distribution in the homes of the people."—Divine Life.

"Very good. Cannot be better. The very thing for distribution." Sword and Trowel.

"The Herald of Mercy is a monthly message for humble homes—we should say for ALL homes, for it is full of Gospel truths which all need, whether rich or poor, wise or unlearned."—Fireside News.

"It is profusely Illustrated, and full of instructive and profitable reading for old and young. The Gospel is presented in its most winning and attractive form."—Christian Age.

A Devoted Life.

BY REV. JOHN MACPHERSON,

Author of "Henry Moorhouse, the English Evangelist"; "Duncan Matheson, the Scottish Evangelist"; "The Christian Hero, Memoir of Robert Annan"; "Revival and Revival Work"; &c., &c.

With Mezzotype Portrait.

Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"In its subject and execution this Biography is of no common order. We have found the study of so sweet and noble a life a joy to our heart and a stimulus to our zeal. As we have turned over its pages we have wished that all the followers of Christ could kindle their souls at this fire. Curious, humorous, pathetic, shocking, and glorious incidents in rapid succession keep the interest spell-bound, and thrill the heart with finer ambitions. . . The Sketch is a vade mecum for any who seek to be saviours of the sin-sick, and helpers of the poor."—Cambridgeshire Congregational Magazine, Dec. 1889.

"This is one of the most readable biographies we have had the pleasure of reading. . . . Christian workers will find it a most helpful, stimulating, and instructive book. It is the history of a real woman, who in the course of her life spoke about the tremendous business of the soul to upwards of twenty thousand persons, one by one. . . . We have great pleasure in recommending this interesting biography. Mothers should place it in the hands of their daughters. It would be a splendid Christmas present from a Sunday-school teacher to his class, or a good prize for Sunday-school children."
Irish Congregational Magazine, December, 1889.

CHRISTMAS JOYS for POOR CHILDREN.

Attending our eight Mission Schools are about two thousand children. We are very anxious to give a happy Christmas treat to as many of these little Toilers and early sufferers as friends may enable us. It would be an added pleasure, did the help suffice to provide the necessaries for a Christmas Dinner to many of the widowed homes known to us. Children's worn Clothes or Toys valued. Contributions are earnestly solicited. Collecting cards may be had.

Edinburgh Industrial Home

FOR FALLEN WOMEN,
ALNWICK HILL, near LIBERTON.

THE premises so long occupied by this HOME, where so much good work has been done in the past, have become so dilapidated that it has become absolutely necessary to provide a new building. To erect a plain but substantial building such as required the Committee find it will be necessary to provide not less than £4,500. The need is very urgent, and already upwards of £2,100 has been subscribed; but an earnest appeal for help is made to those who have not as yet contributed. A detailed printed statement of the case and list of contributions will be sent to any who may desire to have further information.

Contributions may be sent to

ALL-NIGHT RESCUE WORK.

ALREADY, since this work began, 21,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual severity, arising from the recent Dock Labourers' Strike and other causes; and from present appearances an unusually severe season is most certainly apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; or Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or by the EDITORS of "THE CHRISTIAN."

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, & 6, REGENT SQUARE,
GRAY'S INN ROAD, W.C.

The Committee are obliged to make an URGENT APPEAL FOR IMMEDIATE HELP.

1. For the General Fund: the expenses of which amount to about £5 a day.
2. For the Child's Fund: a guinea or two to pay the nurses would in many cases rescue a mother and child. Five Shillings would pay for a child for a week.
3. For Law Expenses: in every case where it be possible the men are compelled to pay the sum allowed by law for the child's support.

The Homes are very full, and the Committee have also a large number of young women to look after, who have passed through, and are doing well in situations, but who are not quite able to pay the full amount, five shillings a week, to the nurses for their children.

The applications are so distressing and urgent, that every shilling has been spent.

WORK AMONGST MEN.

THERE are large bodies of men among the myriads of toilers in our metropolis who entirely neglect public worship.

Left to themselves, these masses of men become unchristianised, infidel and depraved, adding largely to the dangerous classes.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

in addition to its 400 Missionaries on ordinary districts, by its staff of 105 special and well-qualified Missionaries, is bringing large numbers of these men under the upraising influence of the Gospel of Christ.

Last year 72,827 visits were paid to poor Foreigners in our City, and 1,049 religious services were held for them in their various languages.

In upwards of 10,000 public-houses, quite 200,000 persons were reasoned with upon religion and temperance. Upwards of 85,000 factory people were instructed in the Gospel, and many attended the 1,782 meetings held for their benefit.

The Sabbathless tram-car, omnibus and railway-men received upwards of 200,000 visits in the public ways, at the stations, and in their homes.

The known results of this earnest seeking to save the lost is most satisfactory. Tens of thousands have been rightly influenced, and during the past year, 486 communicants have been won from amongst them, hundreds of drunkards have been reformed, and many thousands who have sunk back from the hard struggle of life have, in the time of sickness and approaching death, received consolation.

To support and extend this great work for the Lord Jesus, large funds are urgently needed. Further and full particulars will be gladly given, and contributions will be gratefully received by the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or by the Secretaries, 3, Bridewell Place, E.C.; or by the Proprietors of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE SEVEN HOMES AND OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE

TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

The year's work is just closing, with all its anxieties, encouragements, and disappointments. Happily encouragements far outweigh the disappointments, even judging from present results. But when the assuring words o Scripture are realised, viz., "My word shall not return unto Me void," and the fact is taken into account that of the hundreds admitted during the year, all have heard the Gospel of the grace of God—the "bread cast upon the waters"— encouragement may be taken in view of that day, when the Lord of the Harvest will gather in His own trophies, and see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

With regard to means, I trust that 1889 will serve as another link in the long chain of providential mercies vouchsafed to this Institution since its foundation in 1857, but that cannot be exactly known until the 31st instant.

The New Year's Devotional Meeting will be held at Exeter Hall, Thursday, January 23. C. H. MARTEN, Esq., will preside. It is hoped that on the occasion there will be a good gathering of earnest Christian workers to invoke a rich blessing on this work of mercy during 1890.

Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., offices of THE CHRISTIAN, will receive Donations, or they may be directed to

EDWARD W. THOMAS.

The income required for the maintenance of the Homes is derived from Contributions usually sent by post by individual donors.
No paid collectors are employed to travel the country to solicit donations.
No organizers of public entertainments of any kind whatever are authorised to print the name of the Institution on their bills.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Rev. George Rogers, ex-Principal of the Pastors' College, Metropolitan Tabernacle.

In order to get this number issued to the public before the Christmas holidays, we have been obliged to go to press early; communications received after Saturday morning, December 21, will be acknowledged in our next.

Dean Perowne is not only a Christian scholar of world-wide fame, but also a thoroughly reliable exponent of spiritual freedom. More than once he has shown the distinction between human churches and the one Church of God. He has lately been telling our American friends that, in his belief, there are "other churches of God besides those that have episcopal government." He added, with truthful force:—

> To me the opposite view is absolutely appalling. Therefore I say boldly, with Irenæus: Where the Spirit of God is, there is the Church.

Some of our readers may have seen the paragraphs that have lately appeared in the advertising columns of The Standard, purporting to fix the exact day and hour when this dispensation will end, and enumerating "fifteen prophetic events" as certain to take place at specified dates during the next ten years. The study of unfulfilled prophecy is a most fascinating one, and its problems have exercised many most acute intellects; but there is a great temptation to give the rein to human conjecture, and to theorise upon points whereon Scripture is silent. The paragraphs in question, with their positiveness of tone and preciseness of detail, savour of the questionable wisdom which goes beyond that which is written.

To those who desire to form an opinion on such momentous questions, we would say: Be careful to distinguish between that "sure word of prophecy" which is really revealed in the Scriptures, and mere human speculation, however reverent, refined, or spiritual. Do not let us concern ourselves with the conflicting and confusing theories of rival commentators and expositors, scarcely two of whom agree upon details. Why was the time of the Master's coming left a mystery, except as an incentive to the Church to be on the continual look-out from age to age, always expecting Him?

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance have made a good answer to the reflections recently cast upon them in The Nineteenth Century, by Rev. Dr. Charles H. H. Wright. Not only have they been well aware of the grievous persecution which Protestants have during many years had to bear in the Baltic provinces, but they have all along given ready counsel, and rendered welcome aid, in the reasonable assertion of liberty of conscience. That their efforts have been crowned with some measure of success is clear from communications received from Lutherans, gratefully acknowledging the enjoyment of a religious freedom which was formerly denied them.

Of course, very much of the information obtained, and most of the action taken in such cases, cannot be made public. Suffice it to say, however, that were it not for the exertions of the agents of the Alliance, the English-speaking public would have known but little of the tyrannical proceedings which Dr. Wright has so ably summarised. Far from meriting reproof for not having done more, the Alliance deserves the increased and more hearty support of evangelical Christians of all denominations.

The Queen has honoured her station and helped a noble cause by extending her royal patronage to the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. This is a movement in which there can and ought to be the most complete unanimity among all the Christian subjects of Her Majesty, and she is, therefore, in her right place in leading its beneficent, and, alas! sorely needed, action.

Mr. W. T. Stead will vacate the editorial chair of The Pall Mall Gazette in a few days, and transfer his energetic management to a new monthly periodical, to be called The Review of the Reviews. From the public announcements, it would appear that Mr. Stead desires to erect a sort of literary pulpit, from which, month by month, he can prophesy to all mankind as to the duties and the lessons of the time; while he also holds up the mirror of his pages to the passing events of the month. We wish him all success in his new endeavour.

Punch continues week by week to draw aside the veil that hides our social sores from public gaze. Last week's instalment of "Asmodeus" had reference to the question of amusements, of which we heard so much lately in connection with the music-hall agitation. We cull a few telling stanzas:

> Youth's frank joys,
> The honest mirth of blameless girls and boys,
> The ease of cultured leisure,
> And recreation of tired sons of toil,
> All good! But must Amusement's trade make spoil
> Of souls—the wrecks of Pleasure?
> . . . . .
> Amusement is—amusing, is it not?
> Its world-ward face is bright, with scarce a blot
> To prove the foul infection
> That lurks within. The world might show disgust,
> Were all its tyranny, its greed, its lust,
> Bared to minute inspection.
> . . . . .
> I followed painted faces writhed with mirth,
> To homes compared with which the fox's earth
> Is refuge sweet and cleanly.
> I watched the way of sin, and saw the wage
> Wherewith the sordid spectre of the age
> Rewards its dupes so leanly.

Those who would purify our popular "amusements" have a gigantic task before them.

In the inter-relations of capital and labour the year that is closing has been one of much trouble and upheaval; though these disputes are now happily carried through without the social outrage and ferocity of feeling that were common some years ago. We hail with thankfulness and hope the prospect of there being established in London a "Committee of Conciliation" that will act as intermediaries between masters and men in cases of disagreement, and will facilitate in every righteous and peaceful way the settlement of those social quarrels that cause so much present suffering, and leave so many rankling wounds behind. To make its action effective, of course the Committee will have to be fairly representative both of capital and labour. We earnestly trust that the New Year will mark a decided advance on its predecessor towards the universal adoption of friendly arbitration, not only in communities, but among the nations of the earth.

If the permanent solution of the social question of the day is to be one of the triumphs of Christianity, it is evident that every Christian must do what he or she can to bring about better and happier relations between the toilers and the employers. Rev. Dr. Westcott recently pointed out that the popular disparagement of Christianity is due, not so much to "objections to its documents, or to objections to its creed drawn from physical science," but that it springs from moral causes:—

> Men can see that, if our faith is true, we ought to have the remedy for the great sorrows of the world, and to show openly that we believe in its efficacy. They ask for great deeds and not only for great words. The claim is reasonable; we must satisfy it, or accept defeat.

That Christ proclaimed the Gospel as the remedy for social as well as for spiritual evils, is evident to all who thoughtfully study the Divine Master's utterances in regard to the relations which ought to exist between man and man. The application of that teaching of Jesus to questions of capital and labour would put an end to the unhappy differences which to-day are causing so much misery. We should not want any "Committee of Conciliation," if the New Testament were taken as the standard, in lieu of the writings of advanced socialists on the one hand, and of systems of political economy on the other.

Britons plume themselves on the high quality of their judicial arrangements; and rightly enough. Probably there is no country under the sun where the administration of justice, humanly speaking, is more certain; though its steps are often halting and slow. Yet we are continually called to ponder over "the glorious uncertainty of the law." Some months ago the Court of Queen's Bench agreed by a majority that the Bishop of London should be compelled to submit to the proper authorities the question of the St. Paul's reredos, in order to determine its legality or otherwise. That decision has now been unanimously reversed by the Court of Appeal, which holds that the Bishop properly exercised the discretion vested in him when he declined to take legal action. This controversy, therefore, stands where it did at the beginning. Of course there remains a further possible appeal to the House of Lords.

The Royal Niger Company.

IT is no longer a secret, close or open, that this newly chartered company has made treaties with the several Negro Mohamedan Powers in the Soudan of Africa, east of the Niger, promising that they will not only do nothing through their own employés to attempt the conversion of the Mahometans, but will do all that lies in their power to obstruct others who come under their influence. This amounts to open war of so-called Christian men with the Gospel.

Let us think it out. The company gives a free hand for the conversion of the Pagans. It is very proper and expedient that the rulers of a country should do nothing directly or indirectly to influence their subjects in their religious views. Their kingdom is of this world, and entire toleration is the brightest jewel of empire. Such is the fixed policy of the Government of British India; and manifold blessings of every kind, material and spiritual, have attended it during the last half century. But the rulers of the Niger Valley, to whom the Imperial Parliament has delegated their foreign powers, propose to do something more. They promise their treaty-allies to obstruct the Christian missionary, to deny him passages in their steamers, succour from their stores, and to erase his name from the list of British subjects, entitled by the custom of Great Britain to succour in case of need, rescue in case of captivity, and retribution by the nearest British authorities in case of murder.

The true-hearted missionary asks not these things for himself. His friends raise no voice in the country, calling for vengeance for the slaughtered Hannington. That particular crime has, however, been avenged by a higher Power; the assassin-sovereign has been deposed, and is now an exile from his country. Whether the Royal Niger Company likes it or not, whether it will affect their dividends or their commerce with the Soudan or not, it is well that these gentlemen should reflect on the policy which they are inaugurating, and consider what the House of Commons will say, when it comes to hear of it.

It is true that the East India Company previous to the year 1815 adopted this same policy. They did so in timidity, in ignorance, and in material weakness. They had to face mighty empires, and armies of soldiers, supplied with cannon, trained by Frenchmen: they had to fight for their hold of India, and regarded matters from the point of view of a mercantile company. India was too far off for its affairs to be influenced by public opinion at home. Public opinion at home had not been formed: it was the day of small things: and the individual missionaries, who appeared and were rejected, though saints of God, like Carey and Judson, had not the prestige of the associated strength of the great middle classes of Great Britain behind them. Moreover, it is admitted that the East India Company did wrong; we palliate their offence, we do not excuse it, we cannot justify it.

Things have changed now. The thoughts of men have become "wider with the process of the suns." A great majority of the British people recognise that the mighty power and vigour vouchsafed to them were not conceded by the Most High for the purpose of exporting liquor (of which sin we gladly acquit the Royal Niger Company), or making dividends of profit; but to benefit, in every possible way, the subject people, and to give them the free opportunity of accepting Christianity, which has made us what we are. The Niger Valley is not far from Great Britain. Public opinion will have its sway there. The missionaries were there long before this company came into existence, and will outlive it. The Mohamedans of the Soudan, whether Fulah or Negro, are pigmies in strength, culture, power, and population in comparison to the fifty millions of British India.

The gentlemen of the Niger Company talk with bated breath of the fanatical Mohamedan, in his turban, cloak, and trowsers. The phenomenon is new to them, but Anglo-Indians have lived all their lives in the midst of noble, though fanatical, Mohamedans. Some as fair in colour as ourselves, and many much more learned and polished; some of gigantic stature, and hereditary warriors. Yet the Gospel has its free course amidst the Balúchi and the Afghan, the Patan, and the converted Mohameddan Rajpút, and the Empire of the Empress of India flourishes, because it is founded upon righteousness.

We doubt whether treaties with such clauses should not be denounced as derogatory to the dignity of Great Britain, as if we were ashamed of the religion which has brought us such blessings. The thing is doubly offensive when we are kindly told that we are allowed full leave to convert the Pagan; but must not address the Negro who has got himself up with the veneer of Mohamedanism, for it is no more. Their knowledge of Arabic and the Koran is scant: all the bad salient features of Mohamedanism are asserted, intolerance, polygamy, slavery, unnatural crime, contempt of human life, and overweening pride, while the better things to be found in the Koran, and the learning and refinement of the polished Mohamedan of India, Persia, and Turkey, are totally absent.

At any rate, the public notice has been despatched, and January 1, 1890, fixed as the date of the new policy.

We must recollect that when a British subject is killed or imprisoned, something more than his life and liberty are lost to his country, viz., the prestige of our nation. The representative of the British Government in China remarked in 1873 that there was a necessity to protect the missionary from actual violence, but nothing more. The present foreign secretary two years ago told a deputation of missionaries that the Great Powers of Europe asserted the right to deport an alien without cause shown from their territories, but they would shrink from the charge of ordering his death, or imprisonment, without the form of a regular trial. Mr. Jones, of the L.M.S., was expelled by the French Government from the Loyalty Islands; and, for the sake of argument, we may concede that the Mohamedan potentates of the Soudan might deport a British missionary; but, when they hear that there is no risk, they will certainly kill him.

THE OLD HALL SCHOOL MISSIONARY.—Miss Jenkins, who is going out to Benares as a medical missionary in connection with the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society, has been bidden farewell by the "boys" of the Old Hall School, Wellington, Salop, who have made themselves responsible for her support by promising to subscribe £100 annually to the Society's funds. At the farewell meeting, held at Wellington the other day, addresses were delivered by Revs. J. S. Cowley (who presided), A. R. Cavalier, Canon Nash, Mr. G. E. W. Cranage, and Miss Jenkins.

OBITUARY.

REV. W. GRIGGS, PORTSMOUTH.

THE town of Portsmouth has suffered loss in the recent removal by sudden death of this devoted servant of God, who for twenty-six years was minister at Zion Chapel, Portsea. Mr. Griggs began preaching at the age of twenty, in the villages, and his homely discourses were much prized by the rural folk. When the pastorate of Zion Chapel became vacant, he was induced to take up the work there for three months; his services were so acceptable, that he was chosen as the stated minister, which office he continued to hold till called away by death. During the greater part of this time, he continued his daily calling as boiler-maker in H.M. Dockyard, where by his manly, consistent Christian life, he won the respect and esteem of a large number of his fellow-workmen. Though his daily work in the dockyard, combined with his pastoral duties, must have closely occupied his time, he was ever ready to render cheerful service to any good work. He was held in universal esteem among his brother ministers and fellow townsmen. Though a man of robust appearance, he has been taken away in the prime of life, having only just completed his fifty-first year. He passed away "in harness," having given an address to a Young Men's Society on the evening of his death.

WISE WORDS TO SOUL-WINNERS.

THE correspondence in The Times respecting the length of sermons might have been spared, if all pulpit utterances were as wise and fervent as those delivered to the members of the South London Auxiliary of the Open-Air Mission at Upton Chapel, Lambeth, by Rev. William Williams, the pastor. The occasion was the monthly Conference of the members, of whom about seventy attended. Mr. Williams selected for his subject, "The Preacher Himself," based on the words, "Take heed to thyself."

In his preliminary remarks, he observed that what was worth saying was worth remembering: but while the texts of many sermons said, "Keep awake," the manner of the preachers said "Go to sleep." The preacher himself must be a converted man, was the first proposition. The message might be right, but the messenger might neutralise its effects; as Elijah's staff failed to bring the child to life, because Gehazi who carried it was so utterly unworthy to be the prophet's servant. And not only must the preacher be converted, but he must be so converted as to be conscious of it himself, and that others should be conscious of it also.

The preacher himself must be a capable man. He must be capable of intense feeling, able to sympathise with the purposes of God and with the needs of men. He must also be capable of clear thinking, of discreet acting and of persistent endurance. Further, the preacher himself must be a consecrated man. No single sin must be tolerated, but every faculty must be sanctified. And, finally, the preacher himself must be a cultured man. He should make constant advances in knowledge as well as in grace. Each of these points was amplified with intelligence and fervour.

REV. DR. PIERSON is to preach at Westminster Congregational Chapel, London, on Sundays during January. On January 15, 16, and 17, he is also to address meetings in London on the subject of foreign missions.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—By the desire of the late Rev. John A. Turner, who, as curate of Whitby, had observed the efforts of this Mission to benefit deep sea fishermen, his mother has presented the sum of £2200 to the Mission in memory of her son.

Dr. Monro Gibson's interesting address to the Presbyterian Young Men's Fellowship Union, on "What the Young Men of America are doing for Christ," appears in full in the January Young Men's Review of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. Mr. George Williams sends a happy New Year's Greeting to the Readers, and interesting papers by well-known writers appear. "What is being done at Exeter Hall" is particularly interesting.

The Priesthood of Christ.—III.

(Concluded.)

OUR TWO ADVOCATES.

(6) As our High Priest, our Lord is the perpetual administrator of affairs between us and God.—He hath ascended up on high. He has passed through the heavens, and now, in the holiest of all, He carries forward the work for us which He commenced on earth. (Cf. Heb. vi. 20, ix. 24; 1 John ii. 1, 2.) His presence in heaven is for us. He intercedes for all who come to the Father by Him. He has established a wondrous relation between his work for us above and the Spirit's work in us below. We have now two Paracletes. The Holy Ghost is our Paraclete or Helper on earth. The Lord Jesus is our Paraclete or Helper in heaven. The Spirit prompts the prayers of the saints on earth. Jesus presents the prayers of the saints in heaven. In the significant ritual of old, the incense rose up before God as a fragrant perfume. The prayers of saints rise up now with the fragrant incense of a Saviour's sacrifice. (See Rev. viii. 3, 4.) "It is not said," says John Howe, "that their prayers came before God, but that the incense did, for it is the incense of the intercession of Christ that gives our prayers acceptance." May-be there are no words used; but, oh! what thoughts, what petitions breathe forth from the Redeemer's soul as He pleads in heaven for his own. That great High Priestly prayer in the seventeenth chapter of John is an illustration of the matter of Christ's intercession before the throne. He is also the great Priest over the house of God. Just as the high priest of old had charge of the sanctuary, so our Lord watches over the building of "God's house." He it is who keeps the fires of worship and love burning on the altar, so that they never go out.

Was it an impressive sight to see the high priest in his vestments of glory and beauty, as he entered into the Tabernacle? Would it enkindle feelings of hope and awe as he went "within the veil," there to stand before the blood-besprinkled mercy-seat, bearing on his breast the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel, while the incense rose up before God? Yonder is a greater and more perfect Tabernacle not made with hands. There is our High Priest, clothed in a body like our own, bearing on his heart the case of ALL who come unto God by Him. The ministry of Levites and attendants which gathered round the high priest fades into insignificance compared with the innumerable company of angels that await our Saviour's high commands! The worshippers—where are they? Some are among "the spirits of just men who have been made perfect." Others are below, they are "enrolled in heaven," and their "citizenship" already is there. And under the gracious sway of the "Apostle and High Priest of our confession," the prayers and worship of all believers, which are inspired by the Spirit below, are received and presented by the Saviour above. We have "such a High Priest."

THE SYMPATHY OF JESUS.

(7) Our Lord Jesus is a sympathising High Priest.—The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells us that it was a necessary qualification of a high priest that he should have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way, for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity (Heb. v. 1, 2), i.e., a common experience of weakness and suffering prepared him to sympathise with those who shared the same. But our High Priest, by whom weakness and suffering were never experienced, till He took them upon Himself; "For as much as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also himself likewise took part of the same" (Heb. ii. 14.) He "took our infirmities and bare our sicknesses" (Matt. viii. 17). "He was in all points tried like as we are, yet without sin" (Heb. iv. 15). "Ah!" says some believer, "that is just the point where the comparison between Christ and ourselves fails altogether. He was 'without sin,' and we are not. Hence it is hard to see how He can perfectly sympathise with us." Such good people forget that it is the presence of sinfulness in us all that makes our sympathy so defective. We can never tell, moreover, in any case, what is the exact point where infirmity ends, and sin begins. But our Lord, being perfect, can draw the line exactly between one and the other. He knows when a failing is due to weakness and frailty. He knows, also, when it is owing to defect and sin. In the first case He pities. In the second case He forgives! Is NOT THAT THE VERY PERFECTION OF SYMPATHY? Well, we have "such a High Priest." We are, however, partly anticipating our next point.

(8) While his experience of our weakness prepares Him to sympathise, his Divine prerogatives ensure the Royal right to forgive sin, and adequate power to remove it. The Son of Man hath authority on earth to forgive sins. Sin, indeed, is to be regarded in two lights—as guilt and as disease. So far as it is wrong committed against God, it needs forgiveness by adequate authority. So far as it is mischief poisoning the frame, it needs removal by adequate power. Now, in Christ we have both. He alone can say, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." This is all in Christ's hands. None but Christ. None but Christ! And as He by infinite right cancels guilt, so by sovereign power He can minister "saving health." This, too, is in Christ alone, for "there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved" (Acts iv. 12).*

"THE UNSEARCHABLE RICHES OF CHRIST."

(9) In his own Sovereign Person there are stored such "unsearchable riches" that from his fulness He can minister to every believer "grace to help in time of need," i.e., seasonable help; not only help when it is wanted, but precisely the kind of help which is wanted. We may be called on to work, to wait, to endure, to dare, to resist, to fight, to suffer, to die. For all we want help. For each one we need help of a different kind, and help of every kind is at hand for us in Jesus. Yea, and as the claims and responsibilities of life increase, so will our demands on our Saviour increase, and there is grace in Him for us wherewith to meet them all, and that for any length of time, yea, for ever and for ever.

OUR CAPTAIN AND FORERUNNER.

(10) Our great High Priest is moreover a perfect Captain of salvation, to lead many sons unto glory (Heb. ii. 10). It was in fact for this very end that He was made perfect through suffering. He Himself is our great commander, saying, "Follow Me." In these two little words the whole of our life-work is summed up. But, oh! He is not a bare commander. He not only bids us follow, but He gives us strength to do what He bids. His leadership inspires us, for He has gone ahead to prepare our place as our forerunner. The grasp of his hand upholds us. The gladdening influence of his presence cheers us; his promises rally our courage when else we should faint by the way; He longs to have his own with Him in the Father's house, and He will never leave them till He has brought them there. What a High Priest!

* The use of the verb "to save" throughout this narrative should be studied in the original.

OUR ADMINISTRATOR.

(11) Our Lord is, moreover, the Administrator of all affairs in heaven and on earth, to make them subserve the good of those who are following Him (Rom. viii. 28; Eph. i. 22). It is one thing to lead a band along a road; it is quite another thing to hold the road itself, and to have supreme command thereof, and of all the multitudinous items which go to insure a successful journey. To arrange all the supplies, to keep back all foes, or to disperse them when they come; to ensure instant and adequate shelter in every storm; to see that the sunshine is so attempered that it will never be too bright, and that the night is so brightened that it will never be too dark—who, who can ensure all that? JESUS ONLY. All things are in his hand. He reigns over all. To his hands is entrusted the sceptre of universal sway, and hence He can engage to "bring his followers home!"

AN ETERNAL PRIESTHOOD.

(12) His priesthood is absolutely eternal. It cannot be transmitted from hand to hand, for it never is, never will be, never can be, in any other hands than those of the Lord Jesus Christ. The value of his sacrifice being commensurate with the glory of his person, must have an efficacy that will never become less. The glory of his intercession, "because He continueth ever," must ever be the same. Hence "He is able to save to the uttermost" all that come unto God by Him. And for this cause the Priesthood of the Lord Jesus must ever stand alone in its saving glory. How many have exulted in the words: "Such a High Priest!" How many have leapt for joy at the word "uttermost!" How many who have now gone "within the veil" were wont while here to sing of "redeeming love." To us have they handed down that sweet, that new song—ever new, ever sweet, and sweeter still. "Such a High Priest," able to save to the UTTERMOST—to the uttermost point of time—from the uttermost depth of sin—for the uttermost height of glory! "Blessing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb for ever and ever!"

BRENTFORD.—A building, formerly a beer-shop, has recently been opened by Mr. Mears, the Brentford colporteur of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association. Hencefor th the "Carpenters' Arms" will be used for the proclamation of the truth as it is in Jesus.

THE YORK SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE is being increasingly used by the soldiers stationed in the city. The beds are in great request by men who are allowed to be away from the Camp on pass. The coffee and recreation rooms have been largely frequented. That the Institute contributed to the comfort of the men is evident from the fact that 10,000 sheets of writing paper were used during last year, and 1200 books borrowed from the lending library. The greatest kindness continues to be shown by the commanding officers in the garrison, all of whom have visited the place. Communications may be addressed to the hon. lady superintendent, Miss A. Van Sommer, at the Institute.

The End of the Year.—II.

BY REV. WILLIAM GUEST.

To those who go to the Scriptures, not to sit in judgment, but to be taught, the revelation will be given that the secular and worldly life is the embodiment of the mind of him who is termed Satan and the Adversary; that its customs are under his inspiration; that he deceives by his subtleties; that even Christ's elect are in danger from his devices; that he rules and works in the children of disobedience; and that by multitudinous influences he maintains a kingdom, the evil and tyranny of which it was the mission of the Son of God to subdue and overthrow. There need be no enlargement here of the fulness of the Bible teaching on this great mystery. It is, indeed, one beyond our limited faculties to understand. It is a part of a spiritual realm too deep for us to fathom, and too high to reach unto in our present mundane condition. This only need be said: to ignore or reject this revelation is to reject the clue to the awful struggles of human life, and to the purposes of Divine mercy unto man.

MALIFIC REACTIONS.

In the hour when the Protestant Reformation brought hope to Europe of a day of Gospel light and freedom, there arose the malign counteraction of Jesuitism. Luther's work was one of emancipation, and led men to the Scriptures; Loyola's was one of prostration before human priesthoods, and added to the Romish system a corporation of sinful and designing men. So again, when, in our century, there came over England the mighty awakening of the Evangelical Revival, there arose in the midst of its triumphs the reaction of Ceremonialism. From that Evangelical Revival a new England was appearing, with religious disabilities broken down, political freedom created, a sanguinary criminal code repealed, and reforms projected profoundly related to the happiness and progress of the people. That revival originated also the magnificent movements which bear the names of the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, and the great Evangelical Missionary Societies. The rise of priestism under the scholarly sway of Tractarianism was intended to arrest at once democracy and evangelicalism; and, sad to say, it is, at the end of this year, an extending antagonism in parishes everywhere. Nor this only. While the sphere of Ultra-Ritualism has been in the National Church, the more recent advance of Rationalism has found its numerous disciples in the churches unestablished. They both have one starting-point—a subtle subverting of the authority of the Christian Scriptures. Let us mark before the year closes some of

THE EFFECTS.

Do these new measures conciliate those without? Do they augment the legitimate influence of the Christian Church? They do neither. The term "church" in its varied significations was never less influential over vast numbers of Englishmen than at this present hour. An eminent writer has, during the year, expressed with unmitigated scorn the opinion of his class respecting the matters which under the name of the Christian religion are occupying an Archiepiscopal Court. And the more these puerilities and fripperies are lifted up into significance the deeper is the scandal. Nor does the so-called Liberal Theology fare better with onlookers. In The Nineteenth Century for last June, Professor Huxley declared his conviction, and in this his vigorous words represented many of like standing, that modern Christians are as much infidels as those who deny the spirituality of God. The Jesus of the Gospels, he affirmed, and affirmed truly, was announced as one who would bring a reversal of Satanic work, and would put an end to both death and sin. He (Jesus) spoke of the devil as the "Prince of this world" who would be finally cast out. But modern Christians either "whittle away" this Scripture doctrine of Satan, or fly to refuges of accommodation and allegory. Can any one deny this? Is modern negativism straightforward? Are men who obtained collegiate theological learning which was intended by founders to prepare them for expounding and defending the Christian Scriptures; who preach in buildings no less paid for by those who had the same design; are they honourable in "whittling away," not in the treatment of one subject, but of other and central ones, the plainest teachings of these Scriptures? Did they not sail into a port under false colours, and did not those who welcomed them ignore considerations which high-principled persons are accustomed to recognise? Scientific men who will not evade any perplexing phenomena, and the intelligent artisans of our cities no less, simply despise the preacher who, with the New Testament in his hands, "whittles away" its unambiguous affirmations. These men are saying: "If we are to be taught Christianity, let us have it in its integrity; this is a consistency; let us not have it at the expense of the literary reputation of those who originally taught it."

SIXTY THOUSAND SERMONS, and even more, are said to be preached in England every Sunday. So little do they attract that the Bishop of Manchester told his hearers a few months ago that the churches of his diocese were only half full. A northern Nonconformist journal admitted the same thing in relation to other denominations, but attributed the fact to a wave of pleasure and self-indulgence that was passing over the land. But what an admission. Sixty thousand sermons, and the rage for pleasure without a check! Sixty thousand sermons, with every advantage, material and artistic, and the upper classes sceptical and contemptuous, the British workman alienated and Godless, and the moral condition of cities where the preachers abound, filling those who sound its depths with consternation and dismay.

A DEBASED STANDARD.

The mixing up of New Testament Christianity with Romanist inventions, and the faltering enforcement of its spirituality, are prostrating the whole tone of Christian profession. There was a time when men spoke of "false professors." By this was meant that they were false to the recognised standard. But nowadays the standard itself is let down. The rule and measure of Christian consistency are lowered. This is the gravest peril which Christianity will encounter in the last decade of the century. The old Nonconformist ideal, that church membership emphasised the separation between those who were Jesus Christ's and those who were of the world, is becoming a grand memory only.

CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.

It has been lately stated that in America clergymen and professing Christians have abandoned the ideas of a former generation as to actors, plays, and theatres, and that in young ladies' colleges there has been a departure from the spirit of New England religion, at which Christians of even fifty years ago would have stood aghast. But not in the Western Hemisphere merely. There are here Dissenting as well as other churches where members do not make profession of a "new birth" of the Spirit. Their belief is an intellectual assent that Christ is the Saviour, after the manner that the English Queen is the sovereign; but such an assent carries no moral significance nor responsibility. It is no offence to say this. While these persons profess to be communicants, they do not profess to be "new creatures in Christ Jesus," nor to bear in their denial of the world and of self the ensign of their thorn-crowned Head. With them the most pronounced worldly amusement, or the programme of a theatrical soirée, or the ménu-card of a dinner-table, have conspicuously more interest than a meeting or record which tells of missionary success, or than an appeal to advance the Kingdom of God.

A SOLEMN REFLECTION.

"How can two walk together except they be agreed?" The state of things among professors bodes sore trouble to religious societies during the closing years of this century. When one hallowed sentiment pervades a Christian church; when, if all have not the same influence, all have the same longing, and all unite in the same prayer for a bringing near of the Kingdom of God, then in that binding sympathy a godly pastor finds his happiness and power. But surrounded with worldly-minded church members he finds criticisms and disunions springing up in cohesive thickness. Then the terrible paradox is witnessed—the more spiritual his public prayers, the more faithful his preaching, and the more he lays himself out for special agencies of conversion, the more does he find that a chilling atmosphere of disunity and of carping objections is enwrapping him. Yea, the dead weight of falsity of profession makes his success in the Lord's work an impossibility. It is these lovers of the world and of self-indulgence; these who despise as mere sentiment the requirement of suffering with Christ in his cross; these foremost promoters of secular entertainments—it is they who make the tone of church membership so perilous to young converts, who are endangering all that is worth preserving in churches, and who, in such churches, will silence a true ministry of the Gospel by the insuperable difficulties of conducting it.

A BACKWARD GLANCE.

It has been the habit of late to say that history does not repeat itself. But most assuredly the fruits of principles, be they true or false, always do this. Bishop Butler, in the preface to the "Analogy," says that in his time many persons took for granted that all people of discernment had discovered Christianity to be fictitious. How was the notion, which in our day has its counterpart, met? Instead of setting forth the cardinal doctrines of religion preachers rationalised; kept in the background the supernatural facts of the Bible; removed theology out of the spiritual and contemplative; tried to produce a harmony between it and the philosophy then in vogue; and attempted to prove that there was nothing in the Christian Scriptures which was not agreeable to human reason, however perverted that reason might be. This was done quite as much among Dissenters as Churchmen.

r. Doddridge deplores that some of his vn students ostentatiously ridiculed evan-elical sentiments. What was the outcome this so-called "liberal" and rationalising rocess? The middle of the eighteenth entury was the most soulless era this ountry has ever seen. They were laymen oving in Society who tell us that atheism nd infidelity were growing on every hand; hat virtue and goodness were openly depised; that lewdness was becoming a preading and alarming vice among all lasses; that civil authority was being set t nought; and that political corruption was ast tending to the dissolution of society and government.

THE LESSON.

Men may substitute their conceptions of what is proper in Revelation, instead of submitting their reasoning to its teaching; they may follow what they think will regenerate the world, instead of preaching God's method; they may dilate on the ethics of religion, and keep back its evangelical motives; they may regale the head and starve the heart; they may cover their negations by a show of learning, which takes with the superficial, and by plausibilities which meet the wishes of hearers who want to escape the obligations of New Testament spirituality, but the imprint on the age of a deeper undevoutness and worldliness will be their reward. Christianity cannot, according to present tendencies, be turned into a Sociology, nor a mere doctrine of ethics. It will teach social and moral duties, but only by first setting man right with God in heart and conscience. Its seminal principles are all-powerful, but it makes no claim to power where these root principles are not planted as fundamental. A coming age of irreligion and self-love, of vice that never trembles, and scepticism that scoffs at powerless preachers, may bring such preachers to review their ways, and with intensity to turn unto God; but should they not, that which ominously threatens will be realised: the pulpit through the setting forth of "divers and strange doctrines" will be forsaken, and the "power of the Cross" will be learnt through other agencies. The Spirit who abides in our world to "glorify" Christ will not be silenced by the faithlessness of men.

SUMMARISING TRUTHS.

(1) Let us be assured that the mission of the Spirit for the glorifying of Christ is still carried forward.—Hope for the world arises out of present distresses. Thank God, the Bible is being widely circulated, and the attempt to restore sacerdotal claims is leading numbers of the people to search the Scriptures as they have not done heretofore. The combination of the clergy to raise into dominancy what are termed "Catholic Principles" is bringing out laymen in a vigorous unity. Men are turning from the old "isms" to ask what is vital Christianity. Among Nonconformists the Spirit is striving against confounding regeneration with church organisations. Converts are ceasing to find a sense of safety in having their names on church-rolls. Personal responsibility is evoked. Denominationalism is becoming less a bar to fellowship, and, while no party can boast the one against the other, sectarian distinctions are being eclipsed by the fuller light of the essentials in Christian faith.

(2) The demonstration is being given that that only avails for the salvation of men which is a complete Christianity.—A Christianity with negations, intended to make it conformable to man's fallen reason, multiplies difficulties instead of removing them. A theology with human accommodations produces more sceptical doubts than it silences. And, let it be pondered, there may be a negative theology in professed evangelicalism. To make Christ's sacrifice an opiate to the conscience and not a quickener; to teach that the Lord's death was for sin, and withhold the Apostolic testimony that those who are "being saved" are to die to sin, and, by the Spirit's grace, to break with it altogether, is the preaching of a deadly antinomianism, the Nicolaitanism which theLord says He hates, and may become as daring a negation of revealed truth as ultra-Ritualism, and undiluted Rationalism.

(3) The most ruinous fashion of this age is the boast of a progressive theology.—The totality of the human race, of which we are being told, is one of all time as well as of a generation. Dare any man say that the disease of man's nature with respect to foul iniquity, fierce temptation, and spiritual impotence, is different now from what it has been? Why then are we to tamper with the divinely appointed remedy? Progress there may be in the exposition of the revelation, but not a change in the revelation itself.

(4) New Testament truth in its completeness will justify loyalty to it.—We ought more to pity than condemn the man who denies inspiration. "The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not." A man must know the Spirit's enlightenment by an inward experience, before he can have a true knowledge of the Spirit's words. Adoringly let us close the year by assuring ourselves that, whatever be the unfolding of duty to them in the future, there are myriads of faithful ones in churches, and out of them, to whom the words of Jesus and his Apostles are yielding deeper and yet deeper meanings, and in whom they are kindling a more wondering rapture, as years go over them. They are not ashamed to say in a Laodicean age, with a heathen convert, "The Cross of Christ condemns me to be a saint." The immutable revelation which Christ came from the side of his Father to teach, they regard as proved, through all the Christian centuries, to be gloriously adequate to man's salvation when it is witnessed for in oneness of sympathy with the thought of God, and in the self-effacement that opens a channel for the demonstration of the Spirit. The present duty of all such must be indicated in the New Year's Address.

Tunbridge Wells.

GIPSIES.—Mr. Stanley Alder, Rose Cottage, Lucas Green, Chobham, Surrey, writes to say that the winter's work has auspiciously begun among the gipsies who frequent that neighbourhood. The workers are beginning to see some cheering fruits of past endeavour.

GLASGOW HOUSES OF SHELTER.—These are excellent institutions, carried on in the true Christian spirit. The Hill-street Shelter, instituted in 1850, provides a home for such females as are desirous, on their liberation from prison, to reform and support themselves by honest industry. The average number of inmates during last year was fifty. The Whitevale-street Shelter, begun in 1878, also exists for the benefit of females who have been in prison, and desire to lead a better life. The daily average last year was seventy. The inmates of the former Home are, for the most part, employed in needlework, those in the latter mainly in washing. Copies of the report, and other information, may be had from the secretary, Mrs. A. A. Fergusson, 11, Grosvenor-terrace, Glasgow.

A Monition for the Time.

TIME speaks loudly to us. The close of another year reminds us that we are rapidly speeding our course to the final boundary. What deep thoughts awaken the mind to the consciousness of the solemn fact connected with the great event! We can hardly realise it. "We spend our years as a tale that is told." Each moment the sand that drops from the hour-glass, each moment that the pulse beats, brings us nearer to the end of all things.

We live continually on the verge of the eternal world. Some slight accident may wind up our brief life; and yet how unconcerned we are about the one thing needful, the salvation of the soul: forgetful of the great drama to which we are fast hastening. We are never standing still. There is a perpetual motion, an onward rush. One scene follows another, until the curtain falls, and then all the present which fascinates and dazzles and charms, passes for ever as a cloud.

We live, as it were, in a fairy land. We are spellbound by a whirlpool of exciting and pleasurable pursuits. We are enveloped in the daily vocations of life. We scarcely wait to take a break—we speed on and on, as if we were to live here for ever. And such is life, which is so fast and rapidly drawing to a close. May we be wise to consider our latter end, and earnestly seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness. "So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom."

What is involved and implied in the end of time? Let each one consider his latter end. How much depends on a wise decision. A delay is dangerous. "Now is the accepted time: now is the day of salvation." We have to do with to-day, not to-morrow. How often does a vital change take place within the compass of one short day. Weigh well, and profoundly, the word "Eternity." The silent voice is heard: "Behold, I come quickly."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN INDIA.

A WORKER in connection with the Christian Vernacular Education Society, at Ahmednagar, Bombay, writes to express appreciation of the copies of this paper received:—"Our copy gets well used. After reading it ourselves we give it to an aged disciple, who reads it, lends it, and then sends it off to Poona."

The writer adds:—"Our mission work is all carried on in Marathi, the language chiefly spoken in the Bombay Presidency. Over 400 young men have gone out from our Training School, and are employed as teachers in mission schools, while many have become catechists and pastors. The teacher is often at first the only Christian in the village, and sometimes he finds it very uphill work, but God has wonderfully blessed such labours, and now in many of the villages there are little Christian communities. Our great hope is with the young, before their hearts get hardened and their consciences deadened by a life of idolatry.

"Rev. J. Johnstone has lately become the home secretary of our Society; the office is at 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C., and Christian men of all denominations are on our Committee."

XV.—THE FOOTPRINTS OF THE FLOCK

1 PETER ii. 21—25.

STRAY SHEEP! Can you not see them? They have broken through some narrow opening in the pen; have wandered afar to browse on the rank grass that enticed them forth; have been scared and driven by dogs, broken into smaller and ever smaller companies, till at last they wander alone, or fall into pits, or lie feebly bleating with exposure and fatigue, the easy prey of lion or wolf. Far from the fold; torn, wounded, driven; panting with alarm; splashed and draggled with filth; certain to perish, unless rescued by the shepherd. Such were all of us. "We were as sheep going astray."

How shall we ever sufficiently adore the Good, Great, and Chief Shepherd of souls, that He did not leave us to our hapless fate, but came after us—down mountain rent, through thorny brake, over jagged flints, seeking until He found us, and, laying us upon his shoulders, brought us back. "We are now returned." Safe sheltered in his fold. Listening for Him to call us by our name. Bearing his name branded on us. Not dreading to be put forth to new duties, trials, or temptations, because so sure that "when He putteth forth his own sheep, He goeth before them, and his sheep follow Him." But this following of the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls involves suffering. "Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps." It becomes us to mark well those footprints, as they lead down into the dark valley, ere they climb upwards to the Easter and Ascension heights.

(1) The sufferings incident to the common lot of men.—"Man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upward." "Work is but one half of life; suffering is the other. There is a hemisphere of the world in the sunshine of work, but there is another in the shadow of suffering." All suffer, either in body or soul, in themselves or their families, from what they have or have not, through the malice of their fellows, the malevolence of wicked spirits, or their own follies and mistakes.

In all such sufferings the Lord Jesus suffered. Whatever is meant by hunger, thirst, weariness, poverty, and toil, physical weakness and suffering, bereavement with its prostrating anguish, and death with its dread rending of the veil of life, He knew. These things are common to man. It is by these he earns his bread. It is from these that his noblest offspring are born. It is through these that he acquires the mastery of nature. And because the Lord was found in fashion as a man, He bowed his royal head to endure them. Though Maker and Monarch of all, He chose the mendicant's empty purse, the outcast's fare, the exile's bed, that no child of Adam should be able to boast of an excess or peculiarity of suffering, in the feeling of which He could not be touched. "He was made like his brethren."

(2) There are also sufferings peculiar to Christ as Mediator and Saviour.—The Apostle lays stress on these as the necessary foundation of our relationship to God. "He suffered for us," and the preposition unmistakably denotes that He took upon Himself the curse and consequence of our sin, relieving us of it for evermore. And then as if to emphasise the work of mediation and substitution more emphatically, the Apostle quotes again from that great evangelic prophecy of Isaiah in which the Spirit of Christ testified so clearly beforehand of the sacrificial aspect of the Redeemer's sufferings.

He bore our sins.—It is a sacrificial word. As of old, the Jew "leaned hard" on the head of the lamb destined to die for him on the altar, and the innocent victim bare the burden there, dying beneath its load, so did Jesus bear our sins on the tree. It was not the mere anticipation of approaching physical torture which bowed Him so low in Gethsemane, or pressed the bloody sweat from his brow, as the feet of the peasant press the grapes in the autumn vintage. It was the foreboding of the pressure of our sins, which already began to crush his heart, and which broke it on the cross. No sufferer has ever experienced sorrow like this. There has been nothing like it in the history of the ages, nor will it admit of repetition. "Once in the end of the world hath He appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." In one of Adam's race alone has this tragedy of love been possible, that the sins of untold myriads should pour their tributary streams into the central receptacle of his soul, which should expand to receive them, and so drain them away for evermore (Isa. liii. 6, marg.).

We must not linger long over the phrase which emphasises the gift of his own body to the work of our redemption. That body so purely born, which must have been a fair casket for the holy jewel it contained; which in the Jordan waters was first identified in outward seeming with the weight of human sin, though in itself without sin; which was the very shrine and home of God, who had prepared it for Him; which was the vehicle for so many blessed words and deeds of ministry: that body was made a sin-offering, and, so to speak, was burnt in fire without the camp, as the bodies of the bulls and goats under the Levitical law. Nor must we stay to compare that tree with the wood which Isaac carried on his strong young shoulders to Moriah's brow. It is enough to know that it has taken deep root in our world, and is filling it with its spreading branches, beneath which even the fowls of the air are finding shelter—the true tree of life, whose fruits drop on all lands, and whose leaves are for the healing of the nations.

But there is yet one consideration which claims our attention ere we pass on. Those sufferings, utterly unique and unapproachable by us, which rear themselves amid all compeers, in lonely and unapproachable grandeur, have for ever absolved us from having to bear the righteous penalty of the broken moral laws of God's government. We may have to bear the natural consequences and penalties of our wrongdoings. The converted drunkard, though forgiven and delivered from the penalty of God's wrath, will yet carry to his grave the marks and traces of his excess; though even these may be transmuted into blessings by the near presence of our Lord. Out of the eater will come forth meat, and out of the strong sweetness; but, as for the eternal, governmental, and judicial consequences of our sins, these have been borne for us, and have been exhausted in the sufferings of our blessed Lord. In the person of Jesus, the great God took them home to Himself, and put them away for ever. Because He has suffered them, we n not suffer them; because He has borne th we need not bear them; because the stripes thick and heavily on Him, they need never on us. "By his stripes ye were healed."

The slaves whom the Apostle was address understood full well the meaning of "stripe The Greek word means the weal left by a str From the grave the Saviour came, bearing weals of many stripes, wound-marks in ha and feet and side; but those bruises and wou tell a story which makes our hearts leap w joy. When the Great Shepherd, raised throu the blood of the everlasting covenant, met timid followers in the upper room, He b them behold the print of the nails, and scar in his side. "Then were the disci glad." And as we consider the Lamb, "as had been slain," and discern those preci memorials of his finished work on our beha we too may break forth into new songs, l those in heaven. Those stripes are the price our redemption, the evidence of our purcha the sign-manual of pardon. Let us then app priate these triumphant words, and the wh verse of which they form the appropriate clo and let each of us dare to say, not because feel it, but because we accept them as t word of God, which cannot be broken: "H was wounded for my transgressions, bruised my iniquities, the chastisement of my pea was upon Him, and with his stripes I a healed."

But the death of our Lord Jesus has a dou aspect.—It looks first towards the justice God, to which it rendered an adequate equiv lent for our many sins. This was altogeth independent of us, for whom it was given. B it also looks towards man in the effect it pr duces on those who rightly apprehend "That we, being dead to sins, should live un righteousness." There is a remarkable coinc dence of testimony between this statemen and that in Rom. vi. Indeed, in these word we strike one of the main seams of Scriptu teaching. In the sight of God, we are reckone as being so identified with our Lord that wha is predicated of Him is also true of us. Dea in his death. Raised in his resurrection. Seate with Him in his glory. And it should be th purpose and aim of our life to realise by fait in actual practice and experience all that ours in the mind and purpose of God. Y died, reckon yourselves dead. Ye are risen set your affections on things above. Ye ar seated in heavenly places, walk worthy of you high calling. By the grace of God, ther should be a perpetual deadness to every appea that comes from the flesh, the world, or th devil; and an ever-fuller response to the in spirations and appeals which come from th Spirit of God to a life of righteousness.

The mediatorial sufferings of Christ do thu involve some suffering to us. Because we mus submit to daily death; we must take up our cross and follow Him; we must sow ourselves falling into the ground to die. A perpetua self-denial, a setting up of the cross in our lives, a conformity to his death, a drinking of his cup, a baptism into his sufferings—all these are the indispensable conditions of that salva tion from the love and power of sin which He has wrought out for us. But in no deeper sense can we follow in his steps as the Substitute, Mediator, Reconciler, and High Priest of men.

(3) The sufferings of the sinless Man.—That was sinless was universally attested. No nb or heifer was ever so searched for emishes as He was. Judas, who knew his nermost history, declared that he had be-yed innocent blood. Pilate repeatedly in-ted that he could find no fault in Him at all d the only charge that the priests could sub-antiate against Him was his assumption of eity. He did no sin, neither was guile found his mouth. He did not say, Yea and Nay; t all the promises of God in Him were yea, d, through Him, amen. He was the true d faithful witness.

And how lovely was his silence before his ecusers. Silent before the Sanhedrim, whilst e false witnesses hopelessly involved them-lves. Silent before Herod, so that from ntering his halls to leaving them, no word scaped his lips, emblem of the silence of God those whose natures are closed to Him. ilent before Pilate, except when that poor raven soul gave expression to thoughts and uestionings which surged up from its very epths. Silent in the Palace-hall. Silent in he Prætorium. Silent on the cross, save in ords of blessing and prayer.

But how inevitable it was that holiness like is, even though so still and uncomplaining, hich did not strive, nor cry, nor lift up, nor ause its voice to be heard in the streets, should ome into collision with the spirit of his time; nd in that collision suffer bitterly. As the un's still shining brings out the poisonous umes of the stagnant pool, so did the presence f Jesus among men stir up the evil of human earts, and that evil must in itself have been cause of awful suffering to one so sensitive, o delicate, so holy as He was. The keener the ppreciation of musical harmonies, the intenser must ever be the agony of a discordant note.

Sum up, if you can, the ingredients of suf-fering in Christ's cup. That the race with which He stood in such close identification was so steeped in sin that He was compelled to breathe our polluted atmosphere, all the more terrible, in contrast with that of the world from which He had come, as the foul miasma of a fœtid court or room is the more distressing to those who have just entered it from the fresh outer air; that He was misre-presented and misunderstood and held guilty of sins against the divinest traditions of his people; that He was treated as a madman, and as possessed of weakened intellect; that He was obliged to endure the contradiction of sin-ners against himself; that he was opposed and hated by those whom He yearned to save; that He was exposed to the temptations of men and devils—are not all these footprints of suffering flecked with blood, which substantiate the fre-quent references of this eyewitness to the suf-ferings of Christ?

In all this He has left us an example that we should follow in his steps. It is inevitable that we should pass through many of the same experiences. The Christ-life in us must pass through the same stages of development, and meet with the same treatment, as it did in Him. The world is not more friendly than in the long past to the Master's spirit, and in pro-portion as we are animated by it shall we be brought into the same collision with the spirit of human society, and suffer from its incon-gruity to the holiest instincts of the soul.

Expect to be reviled and buffeted, misun-derstood and ..ndered, cast out and crucified, as He was. The sheep cannot expect to fare better than the Shepherd; nay, they know that they are on his track, when constrained to follow in his footprints of suffering and sorrow. But the end will be glorious, when the whole flock are gathered on the hills of eternity. If we be dead, we shall also live with Him. If we suffer, we shall also reign with Him. Ye are "they which have continued with Me in my temptations, and I appoint unto you a kingdom as my Father hath appointed unto Me."

The Story of a Devoted Life.

CHAPTER VII.

A VALLEY OF BLESSING.

"CAN you preach?" "I try to preach, sir."

"What do you preach?" "Christ and Him crucified."

"Ah! what do you know about that?" "I know Him to be the Saviour, for He has saved me; and I just preach what I know."

"Do you think to convert anybody?" "No, sir; but the Holy Spirit can, and He can use me to convert, if He will."

"Are you fit to go into the pulpit?" "I trust in Christ for the fitness, sir."

"Then you shall go now, and we'll see."

This conversation took place in my vestry one Sabbath afternoon in 1866. It was a time of weariness. As languid and disheartened I rehearsed my sermon in preparation for the afternoon service, I seemed to have no message for my people. It was a weary time in the church. The pulse was low. Praying was dull. There was little power with the Word. There were few conversions. Workers were despondent; the love of some was waxing cold; and not a few of the saints were in sore con-flict, some indeed on the borders of despair. But a little band of heroic spirits were on the watch-tower, offering unceasing prayer to God for a time of gracious reviving. Chief among these was Isabella, who was crying to Heaven night and day for better things both for herself and the work. The answer came; but it was in a manner not anticipated, and for her it was "by terrible things in righteousness." The mission work, on which her heart was set, became a total wreck through divisive courses followed by some; and her own faith had almost perished in a deep valley of soul-conflict and trial.

THE YOUNG EVANGELIST.

It was near the hour of public worship, when a young man, an entire stranger, was introduced to me as an evangelistic worker, ready for service. When I looked at the little man and observed his boyish face; when I learned that only the other day he had been a player in a regimental band—that ancient judge, my Lord Prejudice, mounted the bench with eager step, and as is his wont passed sentence without hearing the case. Hence my rude, ungenerous questions. His answers, however, were given with so much wisdom and meekness that I said to myself, "This is, perhaps, the lad with the five barley loaves and two small fishes: it may be this is what we have been praying for." So I put the lad into my pulpit.

His opening prayer was in great power; his address was in demonstration of the Spirit; it was clear, that God was with the young evangelist. Sinners were awakened and converted. Slum-bering saints were aroused. Despairing souls rose into liberty and joy. Workers were strengthened with all might in the inner man.

The whole congregation was moved; and a genuine work of grace began. Night after night the large building was crowded to excess. Mr. D., the evangelist, increased in power; on some occasions the vast congregation was dis-solved in tears; and at the close of every meeting scores of persons of all ages were found with the eager question on their lips or on their faces, "What must we do to be saved?" Soon the movement passed beyond the limits of the congregation, and many hundreds in the town were added to the Lord. Of many

STRIKING INCIDENTS IN THE WORK

I shall here record only one. At the close of a meeting some ten or twelve persons were assembled in the session house in deepest distress of soul, weeping and praying, but finding no relief. A last word was spoken, when suddenly the Holy Ghost fell upon them and the whole company of inquirers simultaneously believed and broke out into loud and joyful praise. An equal number of anxious persons occupied another apartment, the vestry. Curious to see how it fared with them, I entered the room; and to my amazement found that they also without one word spoken to them, without knowing what had taken place in the other apartment, had suddenly and at the same instant of time passed from anguish and tears to peace, joy, and praise. Among all these I never knew of one backslider.

The deliverances vouchsafed to afflicted saints at this time were a marked feature of the work. It seemed as if the powers of darkness had been making a combined onset upon be-lievers. Perhaps the great Adversary, seeing signs of a better time, had been laying out his forces to counterwork and prevent it. But now the tide of victory had turned for the struggling soldiers of Christ. Of these no one had a more remarkable experience than Isabella Mac-pherson.

For more than a year she had been passing through an ordeal of fire. Without going into the world, she had been made to feel the potency of its spell.

THE FASCINATIONS OF LIFE

were presented to her in a tempting guise. An honourable engagement held out to her the prospect of affluence and happiness in married life. But, finding that the new relationship would entangle her in some of the world's lesser frivolities, in loyalty to conscience and to Christ she refused to comply. She needed not to give up her religion; she might continue to be the devout worshipper, the earnest patron of good work, the friend of the poor. She needed only to moderate her zeal; to cease from the narrow-ness of the puritan; to conform to the usages of cultured society; and enjoy the innocent pleasures of this world—without sacrificing the hope of a better world to come. To plausible arguments and powerful inducements were added the insinuating influences of friends, and most of all the entanglements of affection, a force all but irresistible in a nature so suscept-ible and tender as hers. It was a severe ordeal, an almost mortal struggle: but grace triumphed. She would not yield her convictions by a hair-breadth's conformity to the world; she would not cast even one pinch of incense on the world's altar; she would not once bow in the house of Rimmon. After a long struggle she tore herself away from the tender attachment of years, from the society of friends of long standing, from much that the human heart holds dear. It cost her shattered health and a broken heart; but she kept a good conscience, maintained her loyalty to Christ, and sacrifi-cing the world for God won a great victory.

This passage in her life was

A REAL VALLEY OF HUMILIATION.

In the course of the trial she was led to subject herself to severe self-examination. Dissatisfied with her religion, she set before herself a loftier ideal. A long period of introspection and soul exercise followed. The balance of the sanctuary was now never out of her hand: every thought, feeling, and motive, every movement of her spirit, as well as every word and deed, were weighed with the light of God's Judgment-seat falling with burning vividness on the scales. Too much "looking in" tends to legal bondage; while too much "looking out" leads to Anti-nomian licence. To hold the balance even between searching the soul and trusting in Christ is true wisdom. Amid the incessant activities of the present day there is need of more self-examination, a deeper soul-study. If the habit of piercing introspection is an in-firmity, it is the infirmity of the noblest souls: and often in this way it is that the Holy Spirit trains the worker for highest service.

This, to Isabella, was the hottest part of the furnace. She had summoned herself into her own presence, and sat in stern judgment on her soul. Night and day she invoked the inspection of Divine Holiness, watching and praying: "Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me; and lead me in the way everlasting." She questioned herself in everything, and questioned everything in herself. All was defective; all was unworthy; all was tainted with sin. Her prayers, her praises, her labours, her sacrifices—all were condemned; in the burning rays of the light the Holy Spirit was now pouring into her soul she could only exclaim, "Woe is me! I am undone!" And the more eagerly she pursued her high ideal, the more it eluded her grasp; the higher she rose, the higher rose the standard also. Was she in Christ, she asked herself a hundred times; and a hundred times answered her own question by declaring as before the Holy One that all the evidence was against her. Her anguish of mind was now unutterable, and the adversary frequently assailed the foundations of her faith.

AT LENGTH DELIVERANCE CAME.

One night, after long watching and praying, the Lord suddenly revealed Himself to her in a gracious and surprising way. So vivid was her sense of his presence, that she seemed to see rather than believe. It was as if she spoke to Him face to face. So overpowered was she with the light that shone into her soul, that she wondered whether she were awake or in a trance. Absorbed in a blissful vision of the Redeemer's glory, she wholly forgot her own care and needs, and was swallowed up in the admiration of his matchless grace and beauty. All her trouble was gone, like the darkness of night before the dawning of a fair summer morning. Her peace flowed like a river. She could as soon have doubted her own existence as have doubted the Saviour's love. Her soul was bathed in light; a flood of holiness filled her entire being. Her sense of deliverance from sin was so complete, and her dread of even the possibility of its least breath ever again tainting her spirit was so intense, that she begged the Lord to take her home, crying out, "Let me die! let me die!" She would rather die than sin. Like Peter, she wished to build tabernacles on the mount, and scarce knew the full meaning of her own prayer.

"Oh, is there not a mansion in glory for me!" she exclaimed. "There is a mansion for you," the Lord seemed to reply, "but it is not yet ready; as soon as it is prepared I will take you home." As she looked up, she thought she saw a mansion all but finished; and she was overjoyed at the thought of so early a departure to be with Him to whom she owed so much. This impression of the nearly-finished mansion remained with her for life: it seemed to keep her watching and working; and although the vision tarried for twenty-one years, it was only the Lord's "little while." The joy, the glory of that night never faded from her soul. The experience was so wrought into her innermost being that it moulded her character and life, giving a touch of heavenly beauty and a tone of rare sweetness to her whole subsequent career. The outcome of this passage in her life was clear and rich. The furnace had been hot; but the refined metal bore the stamp of the King's mint. In that wilderness she had picked up many a precious stone. The very sands of the desert were transmuted into gold when the new sun rose upon her. From that bitter sowing she gathered a harvest of wisdom and experience, which made her a guide and a benefactress to many. The impulse heavenward never lost its force; she went forward, nor did she once halt till she reached the goal. Henceforth was the living personal Redeemer, whom she constantly spoke of as "our Saviour." Redemption by the blood of Christ was more than ever her glory and her joy. The fulness and clearness with which she could set forth justification by faith alone was her special gift. The work of the Holy Spirit in the soul was an outstanding reality: she insisted upon thoroughness in conversion, and on out-and-out separation from the world. Thoroughly weaned from all trust in feelings and frames, she now went simply and solely by the word of God. Her year of humiliation and conflict made prayer a leading habit of her life, her chief resource, and an almost uninterrupted exercise. A deep sense of unworthiness, and a dread of sin was a characteristic. Her happiness was simply joy in the Lord; and she never lost the roll of her assurance again. Very tender was her sympathy with Christians in trial; her heart bled for sinners; and, during her life, after this ordeal, she enjoyed unbroken success in winning souls.

On the hilltop, watching for the morning, Isabella was the first to catch the dawn of the gracious visitation. Her long night past, her weary vigil now changed into joy and song, she threw herself into the work of guiding the seekers for God; a work for which her recent bitter experiences, soul conflicts, and happy deliverance, pre-eminently qualified her. To the forlorn wanderer searching for the way of life she could always say: I know where you are: I have been there too."

The effect of this movement in the congregation upon our mission work was immediate and striking. The new fire was not a crackling blaze; it was fire that could be carried and used to kindle other fires. From this point the mission took a fresh departure. Difficulties hitherto insuperable were speedily overcome; disasters caused by sinister influences were repaired: some of the most notorious sinners in the district were converted; and very soon our mission church rose in life and beauty, like the phœnix, from its own ashes. In this work the lion's share, both of the labour and the blessing, fell to the subject of our memoir.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH.

AFTER eight years of almost incessant labour in missionary work in Liberia, and for a short time in Sierra Leone, our coloured sister has returned to England. The hardships, privations, and toil of six years began to tell on her strong constitution, and for nearly two years she has felt she must retreat from the field, at least for awhile. Her last trip of forty miles in an open boat to Cape Mount was undertaken when she was quite ill: it was wonderful how on this and many other occasions she has had in a remarkable manner the loving care of her Divine Master extended to her. She was enabled to declare her message and return in safety.

A fresh attack of fever warning her of the bad consequences of remaining longer, she embarked with an adopted child (a boy of four years old), who had been forced upon her, and reached Liverpool on November 22. She hopes to get the rest she so much needs this winter; she is at present residing at 65, Elizabeth-street, Liverpool.

The late U.S. Consul at Monrovia bore an unsolicited and very warm testimony to the services of Mrs. Smith in the Republic of Liberia. As she is entirely unconnected with any missionary society, her claim on Christian sympathy and help will be recognised by those who take an interest in the elevation of the Negro race. Any communications sent to Mrs. Thomas Davis, Foxrock, co. Dublin, will be forwarded.

LEICESTER.—There was lately an amalgamation of the Soar-lane Branch of the Town Mission and the work of the Free Gospel Hall. A new building has been erected, and it was opened a few days ago with special services of an interesting description. The hall will seat 600; Mr. J. Postlethwaite is the missionary.

A LAYMEN'S MISSION.

ON Sunday and Monday week services and meetings of special interest were held in connection with the opening, at Gloucester-road, Croydon, of a new mission hall, to be called "Selhurst Workmen's Chapel." The work is a practical outcome of small beginnings in evangelistic effort by working people to working people in a very poor and spiritually needy neighbourhood. From a vacant cottage room, which was first secured as a centre, the self-sustained movement has gone on out-growing its accommodation until the present new building—one capable of holding 250 persons—became a necessity. There is an admirable anteroom for social, Bible-class, and prayer-meeting purposes, and most convenient culinary and other arrangements for feeding the poor. The cost of the structure, which is both substantial and neat, with admirable acoustic properties, has been £400, in addition to £50 for furniture, &c. The work is undertaken by Mr. W. Smith, builder, Mr. W. Kemp, builder (who erected the new "chapel" at cost price), and Mr. T. H. Stockwell, editor of The Baptist.

No payments in the shape of fees or salaries of any kind have been given. An appeal has only been made to outside friends in connection with the cost of the building after the resources of the people themselves had been practically exhausted, and they are none of them such as are ordinarily found amongst pew holders in places of worship. They pay current expenses, and have also contributed some £80 to the building fund, one half of this sum coming from the trustees; Mr. Stockwell's gift being "In Memoriam" of a recently departed loved one who took a deep interest in the Mission.

On Sunday week the opening preaching services were conducted by Mr. W. Kemp, Mr. J. Compton Rickett (of Rickett, Smith & Co.), and Mr. Stockwell. On Monday evening, in the absence through ill-health of Mr. T. A. Denny, who has manifested much interest in the work, the chair was occupied by Mr. W. J. Orsman, while among the speakers—all laymen—was Mr. W. Harrison, of the St. Giles Christian Mission. Mr. George Holland and Mr. George Hatton wrote warm words of sympathy and regret at being unable to attend. Similar letters were also read from, among others, the Mayor and several aldermen of Croydon, some enclosing cheques. One well-known Irish pastor sent hearty good wishes and a donation. The working class audience on Monday evening in their gathering to tea overflowed the hall and class-room.

Mr. Stockwell, in the course of an explanatory statement concerning the work, mentioned that while wishing more Divine strength to the arm of every God-sent minister and more spiritual quickening to the churches, the promoters of that "lay" and honorary effort had undertaken and continued to support it under a deep conviction that the masses of our labouring, sinning, and suffering population would never be thoroughly reached until England is dotted with such enterprises by converted, earnest Christians belonging to and living among the people themselves.

It was stated that some £200 remains yet to be raised for the hall, though, pending its collection, an anonymous friend has advanced the amount free of interest.

MANCHESTER PRISON-GATE MISSION.—A brief record of the work of this agency has been published under the title of "Out of the Depths.' Some of the cases are excessively painful, but the most hardened sinners cannot but show themselves sensible of the kindness of Christ's true servants. The Mission-house is 39, Higher Cambridge-street, Manchester, and the associated Home, "Yew Tree Cottage," Sale. We rejoice to notice that the work, of which Miss L. Watson is the devoted honorary superintendent, lies near the heart of many citizens of Manchester.

For the Young.

VIOLETS IN DECEMBER.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS,

I THINK I remember, a long time ago, telling you of the little spring near our cottage, which never fails in the driest season, and never freezes in the coldest. I do not think I spoke of the bank of violets which surrounds it, so I will tell you some of the lessons they give me.

Perhaps you are saying this is no time to talk about violets; it is December, and not March. Quite true, and yet to-day, when I went to the spring, I found violets, though the frost is keen and the fields covered with snow. I expected to find them, and I was not disappointed. Long ago I should never have thought of seeking violets in November; but one day a friend said, "If you look for violets in November you will always find some, and right on through the winter." I had enough faith in her word to go to the violet bed, and there, as she had said, I found violets in bloom and others in bud. This I have done every year since, in England or France. I never looked for them in Canada. One of our little Sunday scholars in the mountains brought us a bunch a fortnight ago, and I was glad that she too had learned to seek violets in November.

Now I want to give you a text about this: "In season and out of season." If, when you work for the Lord, you only work in the likely places, and among people who seem likely to listen to you, you will miss a great many opportunities of doing good. So make up your mind to go among unlikely people and to unpromising places sometimes, at least.

It is now some years ago since Miss Mudie and I had a very pleasant experience of this kind. We were warned that a certain village was the "most incrédule" in the Drôme, and that it was useless to think of having a meeting there. As we heard there was one Christian woman there, we thought we would call on her, and see if it would be possible sometime or other to have a meeting. We walked to the village; it was very hot and the roads long and thick with dust, and we did feel half afraid as we drew near this village where we knew no one. We thought longingly of the direct guidance the Apostles had once, "to follow a man who had a pitcher of water," and wished and prayed that we also might be guided.

Seeing a small inn, we went in and asked for coffee, the woman looked curiously at us, and said: "You are the English ladies from Terchen my cousin knows you; she has told me about you." Then, as she brought our coffee, came the request: "Now you are here, you will not go away without having a meeting." We were almost too much surprised to speak, and she went on: "I will find the room and the seats, and my little girl shall go and tell the people. Take your coffee and rest, we will do all that is needful." There was nothing to do but to rest and thank God who had so guided us.

But this was not all! Presently came in a tall young girl. "Mademoiselle," she said, "the Maire is absent, but my father is Adjoint, and he says the most convenient place for the meeting will be the temple, and the time noon, and he will announce it." So at noon we went to the little temple, an old Catholic chapel, where the old altar is still behind the pulpit, and there we had the joy of telling the good news of salvation to sixty people! Was not this as wonderful as finding violets in December?

Now I will tell you of one of my friends who went with the message of salvation to a most unlikely man, whose house even she had been warned to avoid. She called and left some tracts and little books. He brought them back to her and dared her even to enter his house. She went, however, telling him she did not think he was as bad as he tried to seem, as she noticed his cat was very fond of him. And she was right; the man was disarmed by her confidence, and has himself become a distributor of God's Word.

So now, I would ask you also—you who are really young Christian workers—not to wait always even for fine weather to work in. "He that regardeth the wind shall not sow; he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap." Do not pick and choose where or among whom you will work. Remember the violets. You may find violets in spring without trouble, but to find violets in Autumn you must seek.—Your sincere friend, S. R. GELDARD.

Montclar, December 3.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sun., Dec. 29, Ps. cxlviii. 1—14; Mon., Dec. 30, Ps. cxlix. 1—9; Tues., Dec. 31, Ps. cl. 1—6; Wed., Jan. 1, Ps. i. 1—6; Thurs., Jan. 2, Ps. ii. 1—12; Fri., Jan. 3, Ps. iii. 1—8; Sat., Jan. 4, Ps. iv. 1—8.

Mr. Edwin Arrowsmith, Liverpool, Jan. 1—14. Messrs. R. Callender and C. De Candole, Arthur-road, Beckenham, Dec. 29 to Jan. 5. Mr. Alfred Armitage, Holy Trinity School, Leicester, from Jan. 7. Mr. James Tyler, Forest Gate, Dec. 27; Brighton, Dec. 28; Farnham, Dec. 30; Leytonstone, Jan. 6—10. Mr. Ed. Hughes, Chelsea, Dec. 30. Mr. W. Shrimpton, Sidcup, Dec. 30.

AN AWAKENING AT THE CAPE.

THE Cape General Mission has done cheering work in South Africa. The whole party of missionaries started for Kimberley early in October, visiting several railway centres on the way. At Hex River East the people flocked to the meetings, and much contrition of heart was shown, especially by the coloured portion of the population. At Beaufort West, Messrs. Spencer Walton and Dudley Kidd separated themselves from the rest of the party, and saw unmistakable signs of blessing. At other stations, all the way up to the Orange River, the word of God was spoken with power, and signs followed.

Beaufort West, a particularly dry region, is the great resort of consumptives. Mr. Walton thus describes the work there:—"The Dutch Reformed Minister, as well as the Wesleyan minister, heartily welcomed us, and during our visit of six days we were allowed to see a very remarkable awakening among the Dutch people. Numbers flocked into the church to hear the word (spoken through interpretation), and not a few of the converts were young men. During the height of the revival, in the main street, up to two o'clock in the morning the voice of prayer and praise was heard issuing from the various houses. This visitation seems to have extended to those who never attended the mission, and several remarkable incidents came to light afterwards. We were greatly rejoiced and encouraged, and trust this will open many more doors for us to work among our Dutch brethren."

Of Kimberley, Mr. Walton says:—"This is a town where Satan holds sway to a terrible extent, and the surroundings have a most deadening influence on spiritual life. I never remember such persistent opposition as we had to endure. Moreover, our suddenly coming into very hot weather told among the weaker members of our Mission, two of whom were laid aside for a week with fever. We have, however, been enabled to open a nice little bookstore for the sale of religious literature, illuminations, &c., a thing unknown in Kimberley before. Moreover, we have left Mr. Walklett under the care of a devoted missionary to learn the Kaffir language, and begin work at once through interpretation, in the compounds among the heathen. Grants of books for sale will be very welcome, and may be sent to Miss Gurney, 12, Camden Hill-road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.

"We held missions both in Beaconsfield and Kimberley; two of our party, however, were with us only a few days, Mr. Jackson and Mr. Coates leaving to work the railway. This work is in connection with the Railway Mission in England. Violent thunderstorms, and bad weather generally, as well as an unusual number of counter attractions, greatly hindered the meetings. Still God was graciously pleased to own his word, and gave us some precious souls for our hire.

"The compounds will be our special claim, and we hope before long to have another worker with Mr. Walklett, as well as, when procurable, one or two of the compound natives to assist. Kimberley certainly has improved as regards the drink question; thank God for that. Liquor is cheap and plentiful, but the mining companies not only find out the benefit of the compound system, but are adopting it in all the mines. All natives applying for labour agree to be compounded for certain periods, and are not allowed outside till the term of engagement has expired. This, of course, is a great antidote to diamond stealing. The compounds vary in size, the largest one being De Beers, with its high walls enclosing about four acres of land; no liquor is allowed inside, and the companies have their own stores, as well as hospitals, swimming baths, and washing tanks. In fact, everything to make the men comfortable and satisfied. One can but admire the splendid physique of some of them, and the great contrast between the compounded and uncompounded. There are nearly 8000 in the compounds, the majority of them perfect heathen. The compounded men comprise nine tribes or more, and can be reached through one language, namely, the Xosa, which Mr. Walklett is now learning, while the remainder can always be addressed without difficulty through an interpreter. Other doors are opening, which we hope to fill as God sends us the right men and the much-needed help."

YOUNG ENGLISHWOMEN IN PARIS.

AT this time of family reunion and general rejoicing, when the young people are coming home for the holidays, there are English girls in poor lodgings and miserable surroundings in Paris, to whom we would gladly afford hospitality. They are friendless and unprotected in the heart of a gay city. Our Home is full. Our free dinners will be many. We go out with relief to the poor English families in their own rooms; but we are crippled in our resources.

Many families in England will meet again without a missing link. Some may have a vacant chair. In memory of beloved ones gathered home, will they not help us to gather in those who have no home? "They build houses for us when we are lost," said one, in bitter irony; "but who will try to save us from being lost?"

A young girl in a situation in Paris had but three holidays in the past year. These three days she spent in our Y.W.C.A. Home. A girl converted in this Home was sent out to be a blessing to an infidel mistress. That mistress now sends her present servant to our Sunday Bible-class. The Central Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, is but the nucleus from which many blessed agencies radiate. When Miss Ada Leigh, now Mrs. Lewis, commenced this work of rescue among the English girls in Paris, she adopted the signature, "One who cares!" Who will take as their own this motto to-day, and with it some share in the responsibility of providing for our Englishwomen in Paris!

Poems for the Season.

CHRISTMAS.

A LIGHT from heaven breaks on the wold,
"A Saviour, Christ, the Lord, is born."
O quenchless Light of Life, infold
Our waiting souls this Christmas morn!

Hark to the angels' joyous lay:
"Glory to God, good-will to men."
O Joy of Earth, this Christmas Day
Sing in our hearts thy song again!

See, Bethlehem's star is standing true
Above the Child—a King, a King!
Our Morning Star, oh, lead us through,
Till everlasting day shall spring!

The cradle of a Monarch, see,
So far beneath the heights of pride.
O Love, let down our hearts to be Thy place of rest this Christmastide.

CHRISTMAS—SECOND ADVENT.

BY REV. NEWMAN HALL.

COME, Lord, to earth again;
Come quickly, come and reign:
Lord Jesu, come!
Enthrone the struggling right;
Make clear the clouded light;
In victory close the fight:
Lord, quickly come!

The love of some grows cold;
Thy foes are waxing bold:
Lord Jesu, come!
They mock our hope delayed,
Our little progress made,
Thy precepts disobeyed:
Lord, quickly come!

Bid war and faction cease;
Bring in the reign of peace:
Lord Jesu, come!
Set every captive free;
Let all men brothers be;
Heal earth's long malady:
Lord, quickly come!

Assert Thy right Divine;
O'er all the nations shine:
Lord Jesu, come!
Then earth like heaven shall sing,
With Hallelujahs ring,
And hail her rightful King:

A WATCHWORD FOR 1890.

"Father!"—MATT. vi., 9.

INTO thine hand, O eternal Father,
We would commit all we hold most dear;
Thou shalt arrange—we await thy bidding,
Bless us, and we shall be blest, this year.

What in the past hath been dark and sin-stained,
Freely forgive, for thy Son's dear sake;
Should, in the future, our course seem doubtful,
Lighten our eyes, lest we make mistake!

Quicken us each by thy Spirit holy;
May we be filled with his power Divine,
Strong to do "exploits" if Thou require them,
Willing to "tarry" at word of thine!

Teach us, O Father, the precious lessons
Thou dost unfold to the lowly heart;
May we not hinder thy patient training,
Losing the good Thou would'st fain impart.

Children we are; very weak and helpless,
Thou art Almighty, all good and strong;
Hold Thou us up, till we safely enter
Into the sunlight of home and song!

GUIDANCE FOR THE NEW YEAR.

"This God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our Guide even unto death."—PSA. xlviii. 14.
"The Lord shall guide thee continually."—Isa. lviii. 11.

GUIDED—the swallows are safe to-night on the shores of the golden south,*
But their wings were braced by the western breeze, and the storms of a darker clime.
They wearied oft ere the port was gained,
or they sighted the harbour mouth,
And we weary now as we watch the sun go down o'er the hills of time.

Isa. xl. 27, 31.

GUIDED—we seem as the autumn leaves, that the blasts are hurrying by,†
When the night is dark, and over the sky
the swift clouds sweep storm-driven:
Discouraged often because of the way,
yet still to the land drawing nigh
Where the wings will fold on the beautiful shore, and the soul will rest in heaven.

Heb. iv. 9.

GUIDED—through mists and through driving rain;
the eye that wept on earth ‡
Looks down with the light of love that turns the darkest cloud to gold;
Bear on, poor heart—the perilous past will seem so little worth
In the shelter that waits each faithful soul from the tempests and the cold.

2 Cor. v. 17.

GUIDED—the young that but now have left their nest on the northern shore,§
May wistfully look for the headlands green, or the island on ocean's breast;
But onward they press with unfaltering beat,
who have gone the way before,
On to the mark where the beacon burns, to the land of home and rest.

Phil. iii. 14.

GUIDED—the New Year bells may fall on a troubled heart to-night,‖
The lights gone out on a stormy sea, the track o'er life's ocean lost;
As the eagle swoops 'neath the tired wings,
bewildered in the flight,
The strength of the Lord comes swiftly forth to guide his tempest-toss'd.

Deut. xxxii. 11.

GUIDED—although the storm-winds sweep from the course that once seemed clear,
Thou canst never drift from the Father's love, or fall from the Father's care.
Dearer¶ far than the beautiful birds are the souls that cost so dear;
There is One who died to be our Guide;
He hath saved and He will bear.

Isa. xlvi. 4.

GUIDED—away from the leafless boughs,
to the bloom of a fadeless spring,
From the empty nests that forsaken lie, wrecks upon Time's dark river,
GUIDED—away from the change and chance, to the presence of the King, [fai
From shadows that fleet and from joys that to the happy Home for ever.

ANNO DOMINI.

The Year of the Lord; was it such to thee?
The year that is failing with icy breath;
That is going its way so silently,
As the moments glide to its quiet death.

Were its brief days his as they passed along?
Its days of content and its days of pain;
Were its mornings crowned with uplifted song,
And its eventides with the soft refrain?

Were its hours touched with the tender bliss
Of a lofty purpose—a lowly care;
With a kindly thought for the least of his,
While the Lord Himself did thy burden bear?

In the paths of peace, when thy skies were bright,
Was the glory-cloud a "defence" indeed?
And as shadows deepened about thy night,
Did the gleaming pillar of old still lead?

The year of the Lord! let it sink to rest;
Let it pass away to the ages hoar;
Let it die on the hushed and tranquil breast
Of the years and years that have gone before.

He gathers them unto his secret place,
Where their pain and bliss are alike forgot;
But their lowliest deed will He ne'er efface
For the Lord is the Lord, He changeth not.

Yea, He brings them forth from the dim unknown,
And in solemn keeping He still doth hold
The days to come as the days that are flown;
Our years are his years, till the last be told.

THE OLD YEAR:

WHERE SHALL I BURY IT?

WHERE shall I bury the dear old year
That is dead and cold to-day?
Where shall I lay it? Amid my fear,
Where its dear old memories lay?

Deep in the Field of Forgetfulness,
With its good and evil laid:
Far down, where the clods of the valley press
On the graves Ingratitude made?

Ah, no! I must not bury the good:
Its memory still must live.
The evil I must not, if I could,
Forget, till my God forgive.

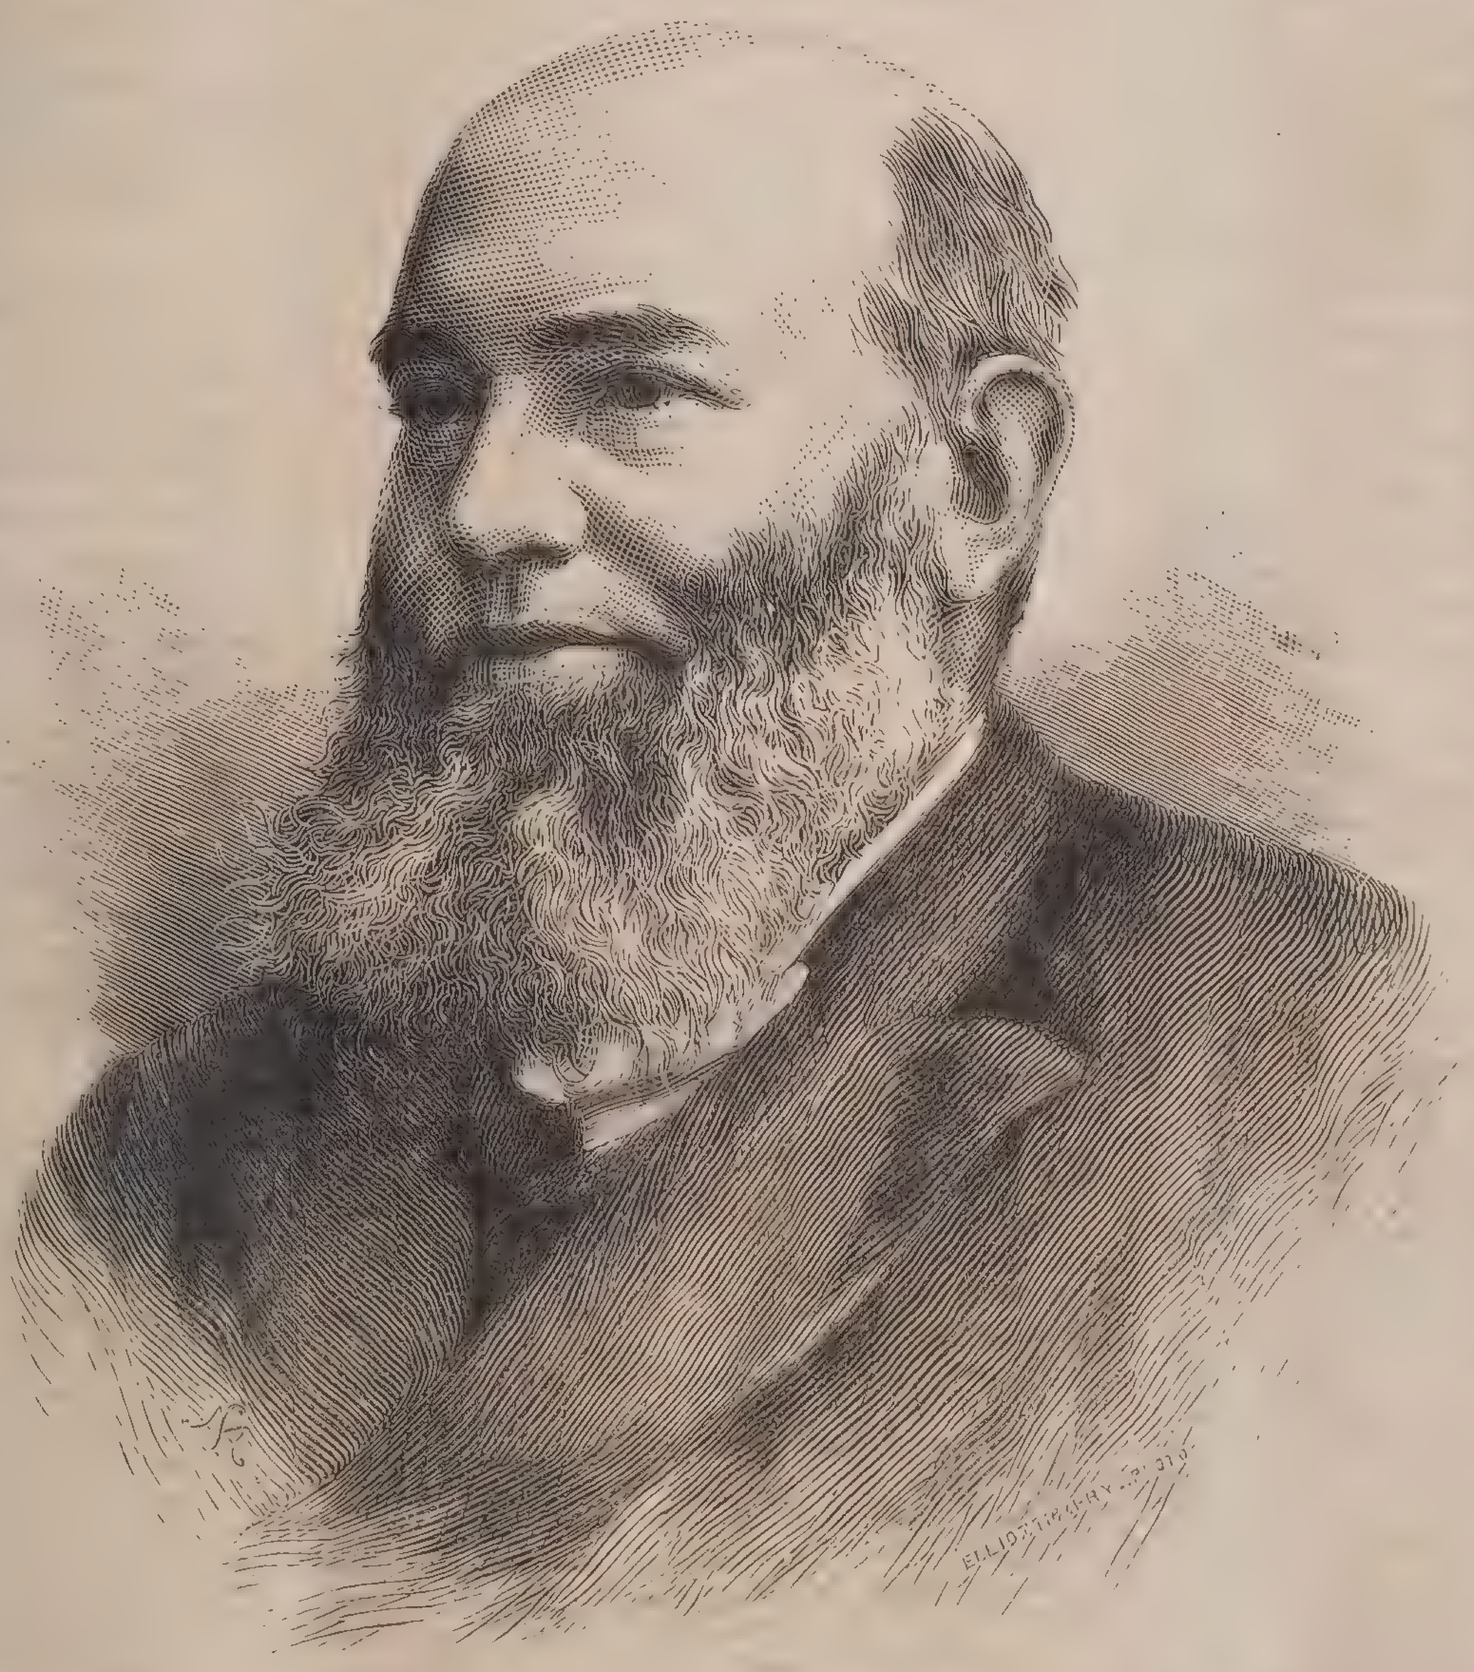
Where shall I bury the dear old year?
In the sunny Plot of Pride?
Ah, no! for many a fault is there,
Which I would, but I cannot, hide.

Shall I bury the year where the justice-throne
Stands high in the noon-day light?
I dare not venture there alone,
Nor come within her sight.

Where shall I bury the dear old year?
I'll bury it near the Cross:
In the empty grave that is waiting there,
On a bed of holy moss.

I'll bury it there with its mercy-tale
Of blessing, and boon, and love:
And sing a song in the shadow-vale,
And plant Hope's flowers above.

I'll bury it there with its slips and sins:
Where sin cannot rise again;
For there my Saviour my pardon wins,
And cleanses my every stain.



WILLIAM LUFF.

THE LATE REV. J. A. MACFADYEN, M.A., D.D.

Of Chorlton-road Church, Manchester.

CHILL November was busy in assisting the dread timekeeper to fill up his record for the year; and among the noble and good who have fallen through its insidious power is the eminent servant of Christ whose portrait we this week present to our readers.

Many who looked at that sturdy frame and that resolute face would have thought that years of good work lay before them. All who encountered the bright eyes and cheery, kindly smile, which seemed to invite confidence and promise sympathy at the same time, felt that such a personality ought to have a full term of life. Its prolongation, animated by powers so helpful to humanity, would have been pronounced "a boon and a blessing to men." Yet, while its circle seems but partially run, it is broken, and it is only as we sit down and take a calm retrospect of the fulness of that life's activity that its completeness appears. Carefully gathering up the broken threads and looking back, we perceive that a pattern has been woven which may give hints and illustrations to many; while the cessation in the full labours of its afternoon is a note of warning to all, to "work while it is called to-day."

JOHN MACFADYEN was born at Greenock in 1835, and, through the death of his father two years after, was left solely to his mother's care. She, however, was exceptionally gifted for the work, and to her strong character, sound sense, and fervent piety he was ever ready to own his indebtedness. He appears from childhood to have been under the influence of Divine grace, and his uniform habits as much as his natural ability as a boy, gave him early advantages and success at school. While only fifteen years of age, he entered the Glasgow University, where he was a prizeman each year; and took his M.A. degree at twenty. After three years' study at Lancashire College, he accepted in 1860 the invitation to become pastor of the Congregational Church at St. Helens, where he soon acquired much influence over the sturdy glassmakers and labourers.

He accepted in 1863 the pastorate of Chorlton-road Church, Manchester, at a time when that town was rapidly undergoing great changes. The business people had for several years been moving to the suburbs, and churches long famous were being deprived of their most prominent members, while in the green fields large churches with only a handful of members were to be found. The wisdom which dictated their erection has long since been proved, and Chorlton-road Church is one of the most flourishing and conspicuous examples of it. Possessing less than 100 members when Dr. Macfadyen took the pastorate, it now has, with its branch churches, a membership of over 2500. The increase in membership is in agreement with the church's progress in all other matters.

Dr. Macfadyen was a great organiser, and a most hardworking and persevering man in all matters connected with his church. While there were many elements from which his remarkable success came, there were the sure foundations laid of its permanence in sound plans of work. There was displayed a deep insight into human nature and its requirements, as well as a calling forth of all the energies of everyone who was willing to work. The rudiments of the whole seem to be comprised in a few simple formulæ:—(1) To find work for each member either in the church or elsewhere; (2) to give room for the natural expansion of that work instead of keeping it within the walls of one church. The pastor was ever the leading worker. He also sought fit men for the numerous agencies which his busy hands evolved. But some members were young and untrained. They must be nurtured and developed. So every night in the week had its meetings. And for those who had no special interest in what was going on, the school and classrooms were open, and became useful as a kind of church club, where suitable companionship could be had, and where there was always someone to look after matters. Thus the young became attached to the church.

To provide for expansion, Dr. Macfadyen determined at the commencement of his ministry at Chorlton-road to found at least one mission church in every five years of his work there. And he has more than fulfilled his desire. From Chorlton-road Church has gone forth a lay pastor and band of workers for each mission church, while Dr. Macfadyen has also devoted much time to their general oversight.

We cannot here allude to the large number of agencies connected with these churches, some possessing novel and admirable features, as it is needful to show that this energetic pastor was not wholly absorbed in the work of his own church. By the careful economy of his time Dr. Macfadyen was enabled to render more help at anniversaries and special meetings throughout the kingdom than almost any other living man. Those who saw his Sabbath work at home, and heard the announcements given out at each service of the engagements and work for the week, were often unable to comprehend how one man could accomplish so much. When to that was added the additional strain of travelling and speaking in London and other places, it is evident that only great powers of endurance could accomplish the work.

Dr. Macfadyen, however, was not merely energetic in his movements. He was an industrious student, and generally spent five or six hours a day in his study. It has been well said that he had two kinds of discourses—one in which he appeared as a herald, and in the other as an expositor and teacher, and his object was to deliver one of each description every Sabbath day! As a pulpit orator he brought his large stores of reading as fuel to the strong feelings and well-reasoned convictions which he uttered,

Another important feature in Dr. Macfadyen's ministry was his persistent method of pastoral visitation. Among the notices at each Sabbath service were given the streets which he would visit during that week, and all resident within the stated area knew that the pastor would surely call. No one was overlooked, neither were the calls professional, but as a genial homely friend and a faithful guide he came to all. It is not a matter for wonder that he won and held Lancashire hearts.

In 1881 Dr. Macfadyen was elected Chairman of the Congregational Union, the labours of which, combined with his pastoral work, made such a strain upon him that some of his friends think he never recovered fully from it. Although his special addresses of late years have had the same powerful characteristics, it was evident that they taxed his system severely. On Tuesday, October 30, he caught a chill while returning from a meeting at Rochdale, and symptoms of erysipelas set in. He preached, however, on Wednesday a beautiful discourse from the words, "Him hath He raised to be a Prince and a Saviour," and then lay down to die. At first but little alarm was felt, but the long-continued strain produced its inevitable results, and the medical report of his illness states that "the most serious complications arose from the exhausted condition of the brain through overwork." After a few days' illness it became apparent that his strength was gone. Frequent periods of unconsciousness ensued, and on the morning of Thursday, November 21, before sunrise, he departed.

Up and away, like the dew of the morning,
Soaring from earth to its home in the sun;
So let me steal away, gently and lovingly,
Only remembered by what I have done.

Not myself, but the truth that in life I have spoken,
Not myself, but the seed that in life I have sown,
Shall pass on to ages—all about me forgotten,
Save the truth I have spoken, the things I have done.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN INDIA.—The Government of India have made a free grant of land to the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society at Lucknow, for the purpose of the hospital which is to be built there as a memorial of the late Dowager Lady Kinnaird. The influence for good which a medical mission at such an important city as Lucknow is likely to exert would be difficult to estimate.

A SOBER SUNDAY FOR LONDON.—On Tuesday week a large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the Lambeth Baths, under the auspices of the London League for Stopping the Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday. Rev. William Mottram presided. Resolutions were unanimously adopted, declaring that London is as heartily in favour of Sunday closing as the country generally, and that the Metropolis should be included in any measure which may come before the House of Commons at the ensuing session of Parliament.

EURASIAN GIRLS IN HANKOW.—The first report of the Home for Eurasian Girls in Hankow tells of a work which, from a small beginning, promises a very useful career. Children eligible for admission are under eight years of age, uncorrupted by vicious associations; they are educated so as to be able to fill useful positions in life. The work is in the hands of Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Foster, of the London Missionary Society, who are looking for a lady to go out at her own charges, and share with them the responsibilities and joy of the service. In a letter to us Mr. Foster says: "We can only offer board and lodging, and abundant opportunities for engaging in missionary work among the Chinese, as well as the particular work of helping to train these Eurasian children." Further information may be had by applying to Mrs. David Russell, 15, Moray-place, Regent's Park, Glasgow.

A PENTECOST IN ASIA MINOR.

IN Beyrout, Syria, on a recent Lord's Day morning, the large native Protestant congregation gathered to listen to an account from Doctor Graham, an eye-witness of the late remarkable work of grace at Aintab. To state that Dr. Graham is a colleague of Dr. Post in his medical mission in Beyrout will be sufficient introduction to English readers. He spoke in English, and Dr. Jessup, the pastor of the native church, translated into Arabic.

There are, he said, three native Protestant congregations in Aintab, planted by the missionaries of the American Board, but now for a long time self-supporting and prosperous. However, their growth was internal, from the natural increase of the families of the native membership; few being gained from the Armenian churches or the Moslems, who make up the population.

The immediate human instrument in the revival was Mr. Jenanyan, a native pastor from Tarsus, whence also came the great Apostle to the Gentiles. He had been educated in America, and had seen something of Mr. Moody and his work, and had caught his spirit. His preaching is marked by much fervency and loving appeal. The nightly services began in the smallest, numerically, of the three churches. Soon crowds came. On the first Sunday night the place was filled to the door, all sitting, as usual, in rows on the floor. Again and again they were appealed to to move forward and closer, which they did, others crowding in. The windows were filled, also the yard, also the low roofs around. As one looked out on the street a sea of heads was to be seen. The pulpit was placed in the doorway.

A remarkable feature was the attendance of women, they forming the majority, an unusual sight in an Oriental land. The second week the services were exclusively for women. Fifteen hundred would crowd the place to hear the word, and then the church would be emptied and immediately filled again with women for another service. Work was also begun in the other two churches.

When they began to receive applicants for membership, they could not deal with half that presented themselves, of whom four-fifths were women. The work continued with increasing power. Armenians, Catholics, and Moslems came. The city was never so moved. Hardened sinners wept and repented, and made restitution for wrongs. At the end of four weeks, upwards of six hundred converts had been added to the churches. Besides this and other direct results, the effect on the old Armenian Church was beyond estimation. Armenian women would take their Protestant sisters wit them to the rival meetings the priests ha started, and publicly call on them to give the testimony, even in these services, which the boldly did, with great effect.

Space fails to describe the spring from whic this mighty stream flowed. It was nothing les than a movement started years ago by th American missionary ladies, for carrying o weekly house-to-house prayer-meetings amon the native women. Through providential ci cumstances this had to be left in the hands o the native Christian women of Aintab, of whon forty years ago, only one could read. Last yea from five hundred to a thousand met weekl thus for prayer and exhortation, in the thirt different districts into which the city was fo the purpose divided, these meetings ranging i attendance from fifteen to a hundred and fifty One washerwoman gave three afternoons in th week to read and pray with her poor sisters One dear aged native woman of ninety year had long prayed for this, and prophesied th blessing was coming. How these facts shoul speak to the Christian women of England!

The fruit gathered was almost exclusivel from among others than Mohammedans, wh largely outnumber the Armenians of Aintab Prayer should be unceasingly ascending tha such-like results be witnessed among Moslems

THE GOSPEL IN GUIENNE.

FOR more than ten years my wife and I have laboured at Agen and other towns and villages in Lot et Garonne, and though we have met here as elsewhere, with opposition and various difficulties, we have had much to encourage us. Several of our Roman Catholic converts have passed away triumphing joyfully in their Saviour, and witnessing on their death-beds to the power of the Gospel. Not long ago, we were present at the last moments of one of these converts, who through long illness had shown such edifying patience, that her Roman Catholic friends, and the curé of the cathedral, who visited her to ascertain what comfort she found in her religion, declared that she was indeed "a saint." All were struck by the resignation with which she bore her painful illness, and by the joy which she expressed at the thought of being soon with her Saviour. She exhorted the priest to give himself to the Lord, telling him he too was a sinner, and Jesus Christ alone could save him. Until the very end she spoke to all around her of the wonderful things the Lord had done for her soul since she had listened to the Gospel preached in our meetings.

With so much to cheer our hearts we have yet been through deep trial. During last year my dear wife was laid aside for many months by a serious illness; and I have felt more than ever the need of a fellow-worker. We have for a long time been waiting on the Lord to supply this need, and we now think He is sending us one well fitted to be a valuable helper. This is an ex-priest of Lot et Garonne, for whom we have long prayed, though he was personally unknown to us. About nine years ago we heard that this priest was anxious to free himself from the yoke of Rome, but many difficulties stood in the way. After years of struggles and conflict of soul, he became so convinced of the truths of the Gospel that he went to his bishop and told him he was about to leave the Church of Rome and to join the Protestants. He is now a member of the Protestant Church, and his great desire is to return to his native province, and tell out to his family and former parishioners those glorious truths which have brought him peace and liberty.

Many who have hitherto helped us can scarcely do so now, and we close this year with a deficit which might well make us anxious, if we did not rely on the Lord.

A Blind "Parcel Night."

ND what is Blind Parcel Night? Curious eader, come and see! The time is Thursday vening before Christmas, and the place is a oom in a Board-school in Northern London! The floor is crammed with an eager crowd, hiefly of aged men and women. Lines of eep care furrow the features; the faces re pale, as if from privation; yet on these very aces—albeit, all are blind—is to-night a right, joyful gleam of expectancy! One of he "red letter" nights of their year has come: our 200 blind, with others who have long been waiting to be "ours," too, have flocked to the weekly meeting-place of "The Somers Town Blind Aid Society." They well know, from past experience, that the Lord of Christmas-tide has put it into the hearts of some of his servants who love the blind to provide some extra and much-needed comforts. How heartily the sweet Christmas hymn is sung—ay, and musically, too! Reverent and silent is the attention while one of the blind prays aloud for God's richest blessing on all! Kindly speeches follow from the loved chairman, and others—words of loving advice and cheer—leading the thoughts to Him who is light in the darkness.

Then follow a pleasing stir and movement. The platform door is thrown open; there is a rush of young helpers (known as the "Blind Parcel Delivery Company") to the room where the towering piles of parcels are in keeping! Each brings in a heavy armful, and the grand distribution takes place. There are parcels long and parcels short, parcels round and parcels square, parcels of every shape and sort; but the size and weight of all tells of very substantial help in each. The contents are bedding, clothing, groceries, boots, money, &c. Each recipient's need is well known, and as far as possible supplied. It is pleasant to watch the faces as the names are called, and each blind man and woman receives, not only a fat bundle, but the additional gift of 2s. 6d. from the chairman, Mr. J. L. Bennett, a most generous supporter of the Society. We smile to note how some of the blind have even come provided with sacks and pillow-cases to hold their treasures.

The distribution is a lengthy business, but one of evident enjoyment. Not a single blind person is forgotten; the sick who cannot be present have each their full share sent. Several hearty little speeches from the blind themselves follow, not unmarked by intellectual culture (had it not been for the stroke of blindness, some of the members would have filled much higher positions), and full of heartfelt gratitude and of love for those who befriend them in the day, or rather the night, of their need! Spontaneous and repeated bursts of cheering tell that a deep chord has been struck. Finally, the Doxology is sung; each one shoulders or hugs his or her bundle; the little "guides" are in readiness; and with warmed and gladdened hearts the blind slowly wend their way to their humble dwellings, praising Him, we cannot doubt, "from whom all blessings flow."

The Somers Town Blind Aid Society has had a year of busy, incessant effort. Every week, without an exception, one bright, glad evening has been given to the gathered blind. Hearts well-nigh breaking have been raised to hope and faith. Homes dreary and dismal have been re-made homelike. Men and women not knowing where to turn for daily bread have had supplies. Small pensions have been granted. All have been encouraged to help themselves, while each has been in many and various ways befriended and benefited. Above all, "The Light of the World" has ever been upheld as the one and only hope alike of sighted and of blind.

One typical case may be related. An urgent appeal took us swiftly to the so-called home of a blind lad in Barnsbury. We found the room utterly bare—an old tin pail the sole furniture, ceiling and walls in an indescribably filthy state. A chair being borrowed for us, we sat down, and before us stood the blind youth (and his brother of fourteen), pale, emaciated, clothed almost in rags, but withal gentle, interesting-looking, and well-spoken. What had reduced him thus? All had been different "while mother lived; she loved Jesus, and did so beg us to follow Him; but father was never like that." Afterwards, father and the lads lived in a small room; father "took up with bad friends," and work grew scarce, or was neglected. The blind boy was sent out to beg; the brother kept from work and sent with him as guide. One thing after another was "parted with," till even the little books and pictures "given to mother when she were married" went. If food was obtained, father had the "lion's share," so that the boys grew thin, pale, and consumptive. On it went, from bad to worse, till not one single "stick" was left. Then the father went into the workhouse, and the boys were left to starve. Amidst it all, "mother's" teaching clung to the lads, and kept them from vice; they just wanted the helping hand, and one chance to do well.

By God's grace it was our privilege to give them that chance. A room was furnished, and the rent paid; clothes and food were provided; a situation found for the younger lad, where he is learning a good trade, and meanwhile getting 5s. a week. Chair-caning is got when possible for the blind brother. Both are doing their best; the home is happy; health is gradually returning; the brothers cling to each other; both have signed the pledge, and seem earnestly to strive, in spite of past disadvantages, to follow God and the right! God bless the lads!

This case, though an extreme one, is a type of many. Will not God's people (for such work is truly Christian) send us the silver and the gold that the poor and helpless blind may be led in the way of peace?

[POSTSCRIPT BY OUR OWN REPORTER.]

It falls to my lot to be present in the course of the year at many assemblies, convened for very varied Christian objects; but I have never attended one that exemplified more beautifully that Gospel of love and help of which the Advent season speaks, than the little gathering described at the commencement of this article. Mrs. Starey, who has furnished at my request the graceful and truthful sketch, has kept herself in the background. It is right that I should add here that she is the heart and soul of this good work, and I was not at all surprised to find that she holds a very warm place in the affections of her afflicted friends. It was a pathetically moving sight to watch the upturned faces, so full of wistfulness and longing for the light, yet marked by a cheerful content, and expressive of thankfulness at the goodness and mercy that come to them through the loving, constant ministry of Mrs. Starey and her friends. These are mainly connected with Regent-square Church, and Principal Dykes, the late pastor, is still the honorary president of the Society. Mr. McNeill, his successor, is also much interested, as everyone must be who knows anything of its operations. I hope many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN will covet a partnership in Mrs. Starey's noble work. Her address is 53, Hilldrop-road, Camden-road, London, N.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—The Archdeacon of London presided at the recent anniversary of the Church Army Training Colleges. He said he did not approve of monastic brotherhoods, but gave his hearty adhesion to the Church Army, which achieved the same good as they did without their possible abuses. He made an earnest appeal for help for the training of the evangelists and mission nurses, thirty being at present in training, and the funds being practically exhausted. Thousands of drunkards, thieves, vagrants, and other bad characters, now changed, are active workers in this society.

DR. BARNARDO AND ROMANISTS.

IT seems as if Dr. Barnardo's trouble with the Romanists were only just beginning. On Tuesday, last week, at the Thames Police-court, a respectably dressed woman, who said she had come from the Isle of Wight, applied to the magistrate, Mr. Saunders, for his assistance in getting her son, aged fourteen, from Dr. Barnardo's Homes. She said she had seen him in the Home, but had not been allowed to take him away. The magistrate said that Dr. Barnardo had no right to keep a child against the parent's wish. He also observed that parents ought not to commit children to institutions in order that they might be educated, and then want to take them away. The magistrate's clerk stated that since recent proceedings to secure a child which had been admitted to Dr. Barnardo's Homes, many parents had preferred similar complaints.

A judgment formed on this brief statement would by no means be a righteous one as regards Dr. Barnardo. There are important facts which were not adduced before the magistrate, which altogether alter the complexion of the case. Dr. Barnardo thus sets them forth in a letter to The Times:—

"The case illustrates in a striking manner most of the recent applications of a similar character. The mother of the boy was left a widow with seven children, an eighth being born some time after the father's death. She was said to be in 'semi-destitute circumstances,' and the boy himself was alleged to have frequently left home and remained away two days and nights at a time, so that the mother feared he would become a criminal.

"Although the mother was herself

her earnest desire was that the boy should be admitted to our Home. She was fully informed at the time that the institution was a Protestant Home, and that her boy, if received into it, would be brought up as a Protestant. As a matter of fact, she signed a formal agreement consenting to the same, in which the word 'Protestant' occurs twice, and is printed in capitals.

"She called at the office on Monday, and asked permission to see her boy. Like all other institutions, we have rules as to visiting, letter-writing, and the like, and her visit on this day was contrary to rule; yet, as she had come from such a distance, she was permitted to see the boy. She made no demand for him to be given up to her. She never asked for his dismissal from the Home. She did request that he might be allowed to spend Christmas Day with her, and in reply she was told that all applications of that sort must be made in writing by the end of the week, when it would be considered with others.

"The governor of the Home, being somewhat surprised that a woman in destitute circumstances had travelled so far merely to pay her boy a visit, asked her how she was able to do this. She stated that she about a week ago, and that he informed her that he could find another Home for the boy. Meanwhile, although she gave this explanation, she made no kind of application for the dismissal of the boy. Had she done so, as she is—though very poor—a woman of respectable life, we would not have hesitated to promise compliance with her request. That, however, was not her object, or that of those who sent her, which appears to have rather been to make a statement in the police-court which would be widely reported by the Press. Surely further comment upon the facts of this case is quite unnecessary."

THE HOME OF INDUSTRY.

THE monthly meeting of workers at the Home of Industry, 29, Bethnal Green-road, E., on Wednesday evening last week, was a very profitable season. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor was prevented, through illness, from attending. However, Rev. F. W. BALLER, of Ganking, was present, and spoke some cheering words on the work which is so near to Mr. Taylor's heart. He told of the recent awakening in Sweden in regard to mission labour in China. During a month's stay, Mr. Taylor held three or four meetings a day; one day, with his son, he addressed no fewer than nine meetings. There has been a great deal of blessing as a result, the audiences having varied from one to four thousand persons, who thought nothing of listening to missionary addresses for the space of two or three hours. The effort has told upon Mr. Taylor's strength, and, by a cold he caught on the way home, he has been quite prostrated. The meetings in Sweden and Norway were held in connection with various denominations, and Mr. Taylor is hopeful that a hundred out of the thousand labourers whom he expects to go out within the next five years, will be supplied from Sweden and Norway.

Mr. Baller spoke of the wonderful way in which doors have been opened in China to Scandinavian heralds of the Cross. A young student at Upsala was moved some years ago, in reliance upon God, to depart for China. Arrived in the country, he came into contact with the workers of the China Inland Mission, and picked up the language with remarkable rapidity. He went up country, and was followed by others, two of whom were Miss Reuter (now Mrs. Stanley Smith) and Miss Jakobsen, whose evangelistic efforts have been so greatly blessed. Speaking of China's need, Mr. Baller said that men are wanted who will go from border to border, in order to open up the meaning of the Scriptures and point out the high purpose of the Gospel books, which the people buy from the colporteurs. Many of the people are in the position of the eunuch when he asked: "How can I understand except some man should guide me?"

Mr. G. ANDREW, of Kwei-chau, also spoke on work in China. His sphere is an interior province towards the south-west, with forty-eight walled cities and towns, as well as many villages, and a population of from five to seven and a half millions. He said it had been his joy to preach Jesus Christ where He has never been proclaimed before. When he went out, nine years ago, there were two Christians in the province; now there are between forty and fifty, two of them belonging to the aboriginal tribes of Western China. These converts have borne much for the name of Christ, and they are showing the reality of their profession by exemplary self-denial and consistent life.

Two ladies, who have for a time been helping Miss Macpherson at the Home of Industry, asked for the prayers of the meeting that God would direct their steps. Both had been hoping to serve in China, and the way of one was already quite clear. These interesting cases were included in the petitions to the throne of grace.

Dr. BAEDEKER was heartily welcomed on his return from Russia, where he has been disseminating God's Word in the prisons of Siberia. He rejoiced that permission had been granted him to enter all the prisons in the Russian empire. The prisons of Siberia are horrible beyond description, and more than full of miserable convicts. Thousands of poor people in chains listened to the Gospel simply proclaimed, and many eyes were dimmed with tears when the love of God was spoken of. The Doctor said he could not help weeping at the sights he saw. Many boys were in prison for murder, and one man was said to have committed many such awful crimes. Remembering that it was only the Gospel which had kept himself from being the vilest man on earth, he realised how sadly the millions of Russia need to know Him who saves men from sin. Such is the filth of the prisons, that on one occasion he was told he must take brandy, or he would never be able to stand the pestilential atmosphere! Declining the strong drink, the Doctor said the Lord had given him the Ninety-first Psalm, and on the strength of its many blessed assurances he went in and came out safe and sound.

In the sick-house the scenes were, if possible, still more horrible. Not on these matters, however, did Dr. Baedeker enlarge; the spiritual destitution of the people weighed heavily upon his mind, and he asked for the prayers of God's people that much fruit may attend a journey he hopes soon to make right through Siberia, as far as Saghalien Island, north of Japan, whither the worst criminals of the Russian empire are sent. He added: "If my last days are spent carrying a gleam of light into that dark place, then my last days will be the best of my life."

Stimulating addresses were also delivered by Messrs. W. Grove and W. R. Lane.

THE FRIENDS AND PUBLIC MORALS.

AN interesting report of the year's work of the Friends' Association for Abolishing the State Regulation of Vice has been issued, under the signature of Mr. Frederick Wheeler, Chairman of the Committee. We make some extracts:—

"Except during one or two short trips to the mainland, Mr. and Mrs. Dyer have lived and worked throughout the hot season at Bombay, and, by the blessing of God, have been preserved in health during their first year of residence in India. But a sentence, taken from one of Mr. Alfred S. Dyer's letters, reveals in a vivid light the heroic style and arduous character of their work: 'Night after night for two months I have retired to rest utterly exhausted by imperative duties that would not be put off.' They have been ably seconded by Maurice and Emma Ann Gregory, whose marriage at a meeting held after the manner of Friends in Bombay, was a new feature in Eastern life."

Referring to the transfer of The Bombay Guardian to Mr. Dyer's editorship, the committee state: "Those of us who have read the Guardian can testify to the vigour of its style. 'I desire to say, in all sincerity,' writes one missionary, 'that the Guardian ministers to my edification and growth in grace.' Our own missionaries spoke of its value, and of the eager welcome with which they looked out for its arrival week by week. It would be a great encouragement to Alfred S. Dyer, an aid to his work for India, and, we doubt not, a blessing to the members of our Association, if they would subscribe for and read this journal. It can be obtained of Dyer Bros., 31, Paternoster-square, London, at 14s. 6d. per annum. A small monthly periodical, entitled The Banner of Asia, has also been started, to attack specially the Government licensed vice and the opium and drink traffics, in the editing of which Maurice Gregory takes a large share."

In a résumé of the proceedings connected with the Patna case, we read: "The irreparable wrong that has been done to Luchminia, as well as the important principle of the right of missionaries to have their houses viewed as something higher than a house of ill-fame, has excited great attention throughout India. Appeals have been made to Lord Dufferin, and afterwards to the Marquis of Lansdowne, two of the most important being the memorial from the C.M.S. at Calcutta, and the W.C.T.U. of the same place. The memorial addressed to the Queen by our Women's Yearly Meeting was referred by her to Lord Cross. But we have never been able to discover in either of these gentlemen any sympathy or interest in the unhappy fate of this child. Alfred S. Dyer has used some very strong language respecting the officials who have been implicated in thus abetting this act of injustice. He has been shamefully abused by the Government Press, and threatened with prosecution. But they have doubtless learned by this time that no threats will deter him from protesting against such crimes. The costs of the Patna case, so far as reported, have amounted to 2,550 rupees, equal to about £180. Of this sum we have sent out £100.

"Helen S. Dyer still maintains the 'Home of Hope' at Bombay, and a few girls have received help and shelter there; but difficulties have arisen which, together with pressure of the general work, have limited the extent of her labours in that direction. Marian E. Dyer and two other young women, Olive Crofts and Jennie Little, have gone out to Bombay to reinforce the rescue and evangelistic work, which will, it is hoped, enable Helen Dyer to do more for girls of this class.

"A memorial was presented to the Marquis of Lansdowne on the occasion of his departure to India to assume the duties of Viceroy of that country, in 11th month, 1888, wherein his attention was directed to the reforms needed there for the protection of women, and he was besought to effectually extinguish every provision which existed for the regulation of vice in India. The Viceroy acknowledged the memorial and promised 'to give the matter referred to therein his very careful consideration.' Unhappily, the latest news from India indicates that opposite influences have prevailed, and the Viceroy's Council have adopted a new Cantonment Bill, which will permit the re-establishment of the regulation of vice. It appears probable that an early renewal of the struggle against that system in India will be necessary.

"We appeal to friends to support us with the needful funds. Some may be disposed to think that India is an outside interest. But we must remember that the men who, under the name of Government, are carrying on licensed vice, and flooding India with opium and alcoholic drink, are placed in their responsible position by English voters. The shameful neglect of Indian affairs by the House of Commons makes it absolutely necessary for someone to intervene on behalf of the millions of India who are being thus misgoverned. The corruption which already exists in Anglo-Indian life must and will extend to England if it be not stayed. Although it is our special task to oppose vice, and especially Government licensed vice, we cannot ignore the fact that opium and drink are powerful stimulants to licentiousness. As of old, the priests were bidden to take their censers, and to go in and out among the people that the plague might be stayed, so to-day we appeal to all who have the love of God in their heart to help in the conflict with these moral plagues in India."

THE BLIND OF BELFAST.—At the annual reunion in connection with the home mission work among the blind held recently, strong testimony was borne to the excellence of the labours of Mrs. R. B. Pim and her fellow workers, in promoting the social, moral, and religious welfare of the blind of Belfast. These sadly afflicted people are provided with employment not requiring the exercise of sight, and by that means they are enabled to do something towards gaining a livelihood. Reading is taught by Moon's type, the sick are visited, and the poor helped. Several friends delivered helpful addresses to the many blind people assembled.

THE BIBLE AND GOSPEL VAN, during the year now closing, travelled through populous districts in the northern counties of England. Several old friends co-operated with the evangelists, Messrs. Wharton and Weaver. Religious literature was disseminated, and the truth, as preached, was as refreshing water to many a thirsty soul. The workers were much cheered in some towns to meet with friends they had made on previous visits, and many things contributed to show that their labour in the Lord was not in vain. Communications concerning the work may be addressed to Mr. P. Moir Crane, Mersey Bank, Fielden-park, Didsbury, near Manchester.

EUROPEANS IN NORTH AFRICA.

As we pass in review the work of the North Africa Mission, we observe its singular variety; the several Berber and Arab races with their separate tongues—this latter with its literature and the whole Bible printed in its classic language; whilst the former have only the Gospel of John printed in the Roman character, though nearly the whole of the New Testament exists in manuscript in the Zouaova Kabyle, and the Riffs have a Gospel printed in the Arabic character for these Northern Morocco Berber Riffs.

The American missionary brethren, when they entered the Turkish Empire, began work with Mussulmans, but soon had the door shut in their face. They then turned to the nominal Christian populations, amongst whom they have had encouraging success. Mission work in Algeria amongst Mohammedans has not the same kind of Government opposition as in Turkey, a convert not being in danger of his life, and, consequently, we can prosecute the work under the most favourable circumstances. Yet here, we are also surrounded by nominal Christian populations, whose conversion would act favourably upon Mussulmans; and being brought face to face with French, Spaniards, Italians, Maltese, we cannot pass them by, we dare not neglect them.

Spaniards come over into Algeria in swarms; they outnumber the French; they are a most prepossessing class, frugal, industrious, honourable, and susceptible to religious impressions. We love all that we have come into contact with. The Alicante steamer brings them to Algiers, and steamers from other Spanish ports bring them to Oran. A most promising work is carried on amongst them in Tangier, something is being done in Oran, and it is to be hoped that the converted Spanish doctor, Don Tomas, whom Mr. W. Greene (Loughton, Essex) speaks of in his interesting little booklet, who proposed to practise at Oran, may be made a blessing to his own people. At Relizano a Spanish baker gathers his fellow-countrymen to his house, and has meetings regularly. A Spanish evangelist has lately arrived for work in Algiers and its vicinity. He is sustained by the Christian liberality of a lady in the neighbourhood of London.

Maltese are also here in considerable numbers; they are rather more difficult to approach than the Spaniards, but both are greatly freed from the domination of the priests, which renders labour amongst them more promising when away from their own countries.

Italians are here also in considerable numbers—agriculturists, shopkeepers, labourers, fishermen, and mariners, and are mostly very accessible.

But the French colonists have a paramount claim on Christian solicitude. They are spread over a wide extent of country in the Tell, i.e., the northern part of Algeria, varying fifty to one hundred miles from the Mediterranean. At least three hundred villages have been formed within the last fifteen years, many of them in localities characterised by peculiar beauty. The French Government has made free grants of lands, mostly those confiscated from the original owners of the soil, in consequence of the armed insurrections against its authority. These consist of town plots and farms, given according to the numbers in a family. A great number of those who availed themselves of these grants were from the provinces of Alsace and Loraine, ceded to Germany as part of the war indemnity. There is a peculiarity of the German-speaking French that they are intensely French in their sympathies, and preferred to expatriate themselves rather than become German subjects. They were consequently pre-eminently favoured by the French Government. All the colonists are given a free passage across the Mediterranean, and half fares, third class, on the railways.

The concessions are on the condition of being French subjects, and that they have sufficient resources to live on for a year, and will reside on their plots. The locataire may cede his lease at the expiration of his third year to any who will fulfil his conditions.

At the end of five years the location becomes his definite property, which he may sell, but not to natives. These latter have had land conceded to them in consideration of having rendered services to France. Some, also, have been allowed to purchase their forfeited lands on favourable conditions.

It has been a hard struggle with many to retain their lands by fulfilling the conditions on which they were granted; some, indeed, have been compelled by necessity to sell them. But the sober and industrious have persevered, and some have even obtained a comfortable settlement. This will explain the diversity to be found amongst those who have come to try their fortune in Africa. Alas! drunkenness and infidelity characterise many, but hitherto there has been no missionary effort amongst them.

A Christian friend, who was a volunteer helper for a time at the Depôt Central in Paris, has purchased a farm in Western Kabylia, on a beautiful elevated spot, having a view of the Ocean, surrounded by Kabyle tribes. He feels very lonely, and would be thankful if someone would come and join him in seeking to evangelise both Kabyles and French. As to outward circumstances and climate it would afford a pleasant residence to anyone having moderate means and seeking a sphere of labour for the Lord.

But the crying need of three hundred unevangelised French villages should have a loud call to some of the many volunteers who have offered themselves lately, who may know French, and though not having means of their own, could be affiliated to some congregations, or missionary associations. May God give wisdom to some of the leaders in missionary enterprise to form these needed links.

To my great joy, a beginning is made in the evangelisation of the Colons. The "Société Evangélique de Genève" has sent two young colporteur evangelists, who come out of the revival in Tarn in the freshness of life and love, and are plodding on their way; but twenty could scarcely reach the need of the case. If means were found, the Geneva Society could probably find others equally suitable for this long-neglected field, and the North Africa Mission would be only too thankful to employ means placed at its disposal for evangelising Europeans in these destitute circumstances.

Algiers, Dec., 1889. GEORGE PEARSE.

PERCY INSTITUTE Y.W.C.A. — The eighth anniversary of this branch was held on Tuesday, December 17, Lord Kinnaird in the chair. Addresses were given by Rev. S. D. Stubbs, Rev. J. T. Mateer, Mr. W. T. Paton, Hon. Emily Kinnaird, and Miss Morley. The leading subjects were the vast importance of the work of the Y.W.C.A., and the mighty power of a really consecrated Christian woman, with exhortations to personal effort and personal dealing with souls. The over-heated atmosphere reminded the friends present of the great need of a larger room for such gatherings.

ASILES JOHN BOST. — These excellent institutions, at Laforce, in Dordogne, which have so long given shelter to poor people suffering from mental and bodily infirmities, continue to hold a unique place among benevolent institutions in France. Nine in number, they contained, when the last report was made up, no fewer than 485 inmates. At times there are even more names on the books, and for the most part the beneficiaries end their days in the Homes. The Roman Catholics have for some time looked upon this good Protestant endeavour as worthy of imitation, and now they have founded a similar institution for members of their own community, at Ladevzre, near Pierrefort, Cantal. It is gratifying to note that substantial aid towards the work of the John Bost asylums has been sent from various centres of Great Britain.

CONGREGATIONAL VISITATION.

DURING the past fortnight Revs. J. W. Paull, Cheadle; T. F. Touzeau, Gravesend; T. Townsend, Shrewsbury; and J. James, Margate, assisted by the pastors of the churches and other ministers, have held meetings at Bridgnorth, Broseley, Newport, Oakengates, Ashford, Westgate, Margate, Ramsgate, West Bromwich, Smethwick, New Brompton, Strood, Rochester, and Chatham.

In most of the places visited the meetings were well attended, and a spirit of earnest devotedness shown which is full of promise for the future. In some instances the church was beset by difficulty, or burdened by debt, and the pastors and members were much cheered by the sympathy and kindness of their visitors. In every place good work was being done, progress made, and a yet more vigorous spiritual life desired. The services were much appreciated, the general feeling being they should be extended over several days. While in some of the churches the desire was expressed that the visitation might become a permanent institution, and an annual visit paid to every church.

The ministers who took part in the meetings speak with gratitude of the welcome accorded to them, the kindness and hospitality of their hosts, and of their own personal enjoyment and blessing in the work. It is hoped that friends who desire greater spiritual prosperity and power in the churches, and a more persistent effort to win souls, will contribute to the Visitation Fund of the Church Aid Society, through Rev. Andrew Mearns, at the Memorial Hall, that the work may be prosecuted with vigour, and a visitor sent to every district making application.

A GOOD WORK IN HOXTON.

DEAR SIR,—I was pleased to see in a recent issue an extract from The Daily Telegraph, headed "A Humble Heroine," the closing sentence of which invited readers of that paper to visit the Christian Institute if they wished to know more about the work done there. I unite with my fellow workers in thanking God for what He has enabled us to do during the last three years our Mission has been opened. We have been able to feed the hungry little ones, and clothe them also. Some of the elder girls have been rescued from evil surroundings, and placed in service, and lads who seemed likely to become idle and depraved are now engaged in honest toil.

I cannot tell a tithe of the temporal good done; but I must just mention the important spiritual work. The noble woman mentioned in your extract is only one of many more who are now rejoicing in salvation. Indeed a goodly number of our most devoted workers were, previous to the opening of the Christian Institute, living without God and without hope. Now they are rejoicing in and testifying to the power of the grand old Gospel of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ.

I regret to say that since that article appeared in The Daily Telegraph, the building in which this good work has been done has been condemned by the London County Council. The work is being carried on to some extent at Hoxton Academy, some five minutes' walk from the market. This has entailed a largely increased expenditure which we hope will be met by the contributions of those who have work amongst the poor at heart. The whole of the workers give their services for Christ's sake; every penny goes to help the poor in their temporal needs, and to the preaching of the Gospel among them. Our tract distributors visit about five hundred homes every Sunday afternoon, and would be glad of books or tracts of a suitable kind.

Yours faithfully, F. J. THOMAS,
Supt. of Sunday-school.

A PROTEST AGAINST GAMBLING.

The following protest has been issued by the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations:—

Having been informed from various sources of the alarming extent to which the practice of gambling prevails amongst young men, and recognising the great importance which attaches to a vigorous and healthy public opinion being created and fostered among young men themselves upon the subject, and the value to this end of the several pronouncements already made by different religious bodies in relation thereto, this National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations recommends:—

"That active steps be taken by Associations throughout the Union, through their meetings and other agencies, through the District Conferences of Y.M.C.A.'s, through Y.M.C.A. journals and the public Press, to awaken young men to a sense of the many and grave evils and the dangers to which the practice of betting exposes them; that careful supervision be exercised in regard to agencies that may prove a source of temptation thereto; and that the earnest efforts of the young manhood represented by the membership of the Associations be enlisted in the endeavour, by personal example and influence, to combat a practice which has proved, and is proving itself, baneful to industry, ruinous to character, and destructive alike of the moral and material well-being of the young men of the community."

A WORD FROM NORTHFIELD.

The influence of the August Convention, which is permeated with a missionary spirit, and which draws together rare workers from distant fields, is not limited to foreign lands. The writer has received a letter from a busy lawyer who last summer attended those meetings for the first time. He writes:—"Ever since I was at Northfield the burden of my own town and its young men has been laid upon me; and I feel it so strongly that, whether anybody else moves or not, I am determined to begin here an evangelistic work on my own responsibility. But I am not alone; as a people, we are seeking prayerfully the reviving influence of the Holy Spirit." These annual gatherings touch hearts all round the world.

The Northfield Seminary is besieged with applications, and many a young lady waits at the door for admission. New facilities are offered, and yet these are not sufficient. The late treasurer, Mr. Marshall, has sold his elegant homestead to Mr. Moody, and the house is occupied by the president, Miss Evelyn S. Hall, and several pupils. It is christened, in honour of F. H. Revell—the well-known publisher, Mrs. Moody's brother—"The Revell." The large and commodious barn has been remodelled, and is called "The Holton House," in memory of a much-loved niece of Mr. Moody, making a most desirable home for many students. The "Betsey Moody Cottage" is nearly finished.

A hearty welcome was given to Mr. Moody on his return for a week or two of rest. The Seminary buildings were illuminated, so that on the two mile ride from South Vernon station over the river Mr. Moody might be sure of a "light in the window." Nowhere in the wide world is the beloved evangelist more sure of a hearty welcome than at home where his neighbours and friends reside. S. E. B.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY have been holding meetings in connection with the Brooklyn Y.M.C.A. On Sunday evening, Dec. 8, after Mr. Sankey had sung "Almost persuaded," 140 men rose for prayer. Thus the power of God was manifested in the conviction of sinners.

THE MISSIONARY BUREAU.

It was recently stated in The Christian that the Committee of the Missionary Bureau would be prepared, if funds were forthcoming, to assist in the matter of passage and outfit any desirous of going to foreign lands as self-supporting missionaries who were unable to meet their initial expenses.

Since that time many applications have been made to the Bureau. Some of them are very deserving cases, and are highly recommended by their ministers and others. The following are samples:—

(1) A clergyman of the Church of England and his wife desire to go to Savoy to labour among Roman Catholics. This requires £50.

(2) Another clergyman of the Church of England has Spain specially laid upon his heart.

(3) A missionary in connection with the Church of England, at present labouring among navvies, desires to go to Canada where he will be supported by the bishop. He requires passage money, outfit, and books.

(4) A schoolmaster, anxious to go to a sphere of service that awaits him in Africa. He needs £50. His friends will supply £25, and they appeal to the Bureau for the other £25.

(5) A missionary in the Argentine Republic asks for a grant of agricultural implements, carpenters' and smiths' tools This same missionary desires two youths, sixteen to eighteen years of age, to be sent out to him. He will support them. Passage and outfit would be required.

(6) Passage and outfit required for a missionary to seamen in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. Friends in Brazil will guarantee the salary, if a suitable man be sent out.

Will the stewards of God's household kindly take these five requests with them into their prayer-closets and spread them out before the Lord, saying unto Him, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" Address: The Missionary Bureau, 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

HOMES FOR DESTITUTE BOYS.

Visitors to the new Wimbledon Camp at Bisley, near Woking (viâ Waterloo and Brookwood), would do well next year to inspect two of the model country Homes for destitute boys, within a short distance of the camp. They are open to the public every week-day during working hours. Over three hundred boys are being clothed, educated, and trained in the Bisley Farm and Shaftesbury Schools. The trades taught are tailoring, shoemaking, knitting socks, baking, carpentering, gardening, and looking after cattle. The Farm School, with about 150 acres of freehold land and numerous farm offices, affords a lad an excellent training for garden or farm work at home or in the colonies, and provides him with a healthy out-door life.

Many of the lads who have prospered in Canada have written home letters full of gratitude to Mr. Williams, the secretary, for benefits received at the Homes; some remit money to help other lads; and many of the old boys turn up at the various Homes, from year to year, where they receive a hearty welcome.

The writer has paid many visits to the Bisley Homes, and to Fortescue House, Twickenham, and can testify to the excellent rescue work that is being carried on there for the religious and moral welfare of homeless, destitute boys. The girls are equally well cared for at Ealing and Sudbury. Fifteen pounds will maintain a boy or girl in any of the six Homes for a year. Over ten thousand poor children have been received into the National Refuges since 1843, and about a thousand are at present provided for annually by voluntary contributions.

The late revered president, the Earl of Shaftesbury, in 1866, said to the Secretary: "It has been the dream of my life to have a training-ship for these boys." Very soon the good Earl's dream was fully realised, and for over a score of years the sailor lads of the Chichester and Arethusa have maintained the prestige of these, the first training ships for the merchant service in the kingdom. At Exeter Hall they are deservedly popular.

In May, 1888, the president, the Earl of Jersey, opened the fine Memorial Home, Shaftesbury House, Shaftesbury-avenue; it is a centre of ever increasing usefulness. The Earl and Lady Jersey both take a lively and personal interest in the boys and girls.

TOUCH OF NATURE IN RELIGION.

Many persons who cannot clearly discern the spiritual aspect of a creed, however true, or mark its function as a mould of conduct, can fairly gauge its practical result. Its nearest human interest consists in what it can do for the individual. Does it help, relieve, or cheer him; does it, in a word, exert a kindly influence upon him, or the reverse? According to its humanity it evokes that quality of mercy or sympathy which somewhere lives in every human mind, and is its essential means of intercourse with other minds, even without the aid of articulate language. It is this quality which forms the very soul and character of true religion, which constitutes at once its brightest attraction, its wisest resource, and its most powerful aid in times of perplexity and of danger.

It was therefore a shrewd as well as a benign intention which first associated with missionary enterprise the sensible blessing of medical skill. There can be no doubt that the influence which has been exercised in later times by the former agency has been greatly aided by this beneficent connection, and there is evidence also to show that it has gained from the same union a means of appeal which has availed it in times of popular passion. We need not go back to the Pauline era for illustrations. Such recent experience as that of a Chinese mission will suffice for our present purpose. It is reported that during the late disturbances in Southern China, consequent upon the French expedition to Tonquin, a small Wesleyan mission station at Fatshan was at the mercy of a riotous mob. The chapel was wrecked. The hospital for days was menaced, and was hourly expected to fall, but here for the first time the rioters appeared to hesitate. Some of the sick were removed before their eyes; others they knew could not leave the building. They constantly threatened the assault, yet the blow never came, and amid their angry menaces the doctor was allowed to pass freely to and from the hospital. A finer touch than that which compelled a kindred feeling between this rabble and its foreign benefactors does not exist in nature. The Chinese mob probably did not include many acute controversialists in theology, but it did as a whole recognise the presence of that charity which is rightly regarded as the essence of religion.—The Lancet.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Once a year the members of the Open-Air Mission assemble for prayer. On the occasion of the anniversary in Hawkestone Hall, Westminster Bridge-road, they were addressed by Rev. Newman Hall, who took the members' motto for next year as his topic. This motto (1 Chron. xxviii. 20) is an exhortation to strength, courage, and action. Some cheering incidents were related by Mr. Hall to encourage the brethren. He said he cared little for denominationalism, but he was very much concerned that the Gospel should be fully preached, now that so many were denying it. During the evening about a dozen of the preachers led in prayer, and Charles Inglis and Edward Wright spoke.

reported decease of Messrs. Morris and , two members of Mr. F. S. Arnot's party, given great sorrow to friends at home. Cen- Africa's need lay so near the hearts of these ted men, that the news of their death was d with astonished silence. Mr. Morris from Walthamstow, and Mr. Gall from hgate. They hoped to be successful evan- sts, and their friends were awaiting only l tidings.

n October 14, Mr. Arnot wrote home:—"A y happy company we are; in fact, I might that the perfect harmony we all enjoy is Lord's special favour upon us. Nearly all number are able now to make their minor nts known in Umbundu." Five days later cloud of sorrow broke. Mr. Morris's last scious words were:—"The crowning day is ning by and by." Later on, when in de- um through the fever, he repeated, "For d so loved the world," &c. and on this blessed me his heart went out to those round him. n a quiet spot where two roads meet, a few les from Bihé, the remains of the two oted heralds of the Cross were interred. Mr. not addressed the natives, with evident propriateness, on the words "Except a corn wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth ne." Writing on October 24, five days after sad blow, Mr. Arnot says: "All the naining members of the company are in good alth. It is very evident that the germs of er were brought from the coast. Messrs. ompson and Lane, and Miss Gilchrist are th us, on our way to Bihé."

Mrs. Morris and Miss Davies are returning to ngland, accompanied by Mr. George Fisher, Swansea.

THE BIBLE IN PORTUGAL.—Mr. Herbert ssels, of Oporto, in order to encourage the circu- tion of the Holy Scriptures in the country, is blishing an illustrated edition of the Bible in ortuguese. The work contains the common anslation of the Vulgate, with the text of the ulgate itself; and it is first of all being given to e world in penny serial parts. Messrs. Cassell, e famous London publishers, are supplying the ngravings, and it is hoped that the attractiveness the book will induce many to procure it, and nable them to find peace of soul in Christ.

PACIFIC GARDEN MISSION, CHICAGO.—The welfth year of the work of this Mission has, judg- g by visible results, been the most successful yet xperienced. Visiting the sick and needy has been n important branch; and labour among prisoners as been prosecuted with encouraging success. Many of the converts of the Mission are now active vorkers in the great harvest field. Not a few drunkards and criminals have, by God's grace, undergone such a change that they are now leading reformed lives. The operations require enlarge- ment, but so far the means are not available. The superintendent is Colonel G. R. Clarke, 100, East Van Buren-street, Chicago.

ST. PAUL'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—Forty- seven years ago a missionary society was formed in the business house of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams & Co., of St. Paul's Churchyard, for the purpose of aid- ing home and foreign mission work and promoting the spiritual well-being of the employés. The an- nual meeting was held on Friday week. Mr. George Williams, the honoured principal of this large establishment, presided, and, after prayer by Rev. H. Grainger, Mr. Williams' eldest son read a por- tion of Scripture, and valuable addresses were de- livered by Rev. Jas. Sadler (London Missionary Society), of Amoy, and Rev. J. J. Fuller, for forty- five years missionary in West Africa, of the Bap- tist Missionary Society, and also by Rev. A. R. Buckland, Bishop Crowther, of the Niger, was to have been present, but was prevented by indisposi- tion. A very interesting report was read by the Secretary, in which it was stated that over £100 had been collected during the year and divided among different missionary societies, home and foreign. Weekly services have been held on the premises, when addresses have been delivered by leading clergymen, ministers, and prominent Chris- tian laymen.

Letter to the Editor.

THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS AND PROPHECY.

DEAR SIR,—A short paragraph in your issue of November 29 is of such more than passing interest that I would bespeak leave to direct the attention of my fellow Christians to its importance.

It states that in 1841 the number of Jews in Palestine was 8000, in 1883 they had increased to 20,000, and in 1888 they had in five years increased by an addition of 50,000, numbering then no fewer than 70,000, about the number that came up from Babylon. Further, it was noted that the "latter rains" had been restored to the land, after a with- drawal for centuries—the withholding of these refreshing and fertilising showers being, as stated in prophecy, an evidence of God's displeasure, and their bestowal a mark of his favour.

These are very remarkable and important state- ments, and would seem to indicate that we are on the eve of great events.

Students of prophecy have long recognised the fact that, looking to the great amount of con- fessedly fulfilled prophecy—there remains but one distinctly declared event between us and the goal of the hope of the Christian Church, and that event is the restoration of the Jews to their own land.

When it takes place, it is high time to remember the parable of the fig tree, which tells when sum- mer is nigh, and seeing these things come to pass know that He is nigh, even at the doors.

I presume that since last year, the increase has gone on at an equal, if not accelerating ratio, espe- cially in view of the strong persecution to which the Jews are being subjected by Russia, with a view to expelling them from her territories, whilst the anti-Semitic agitation throughout Europe, forbids them a resting-place in other countries.

Turning then to Palestine, we must not lose sight of the fact that a railway is being constructed from Jaffa to Jerusalem, bringing the holy city into direct communication with the Mediterranean, and consequently into rapid communication with the whole world—so that, should the movement assume larger dimensions, ample facilities will exist for its easy accomplishment.

It may be worth noticing that the remarkable prophetic cycle of 1260 years—dating from the building of the Mosque of Omar upon the founda- tions of the Temple, A.D. 637, is completed in 1897, little more than seven years from this date. It will not be surprising if Islamism is expelled from the site by that time.

Politically, we already see Russia moving in her hatred of the Jews, and it is certainly worth re- marking that our revised Bible, in Ezek. xxxviii., seems to refer very distinctly to this power, which your issue of December 6 points out as the merci- less oppressor of the Protestants also at the present time, and whose aim and endeavour is to impose a fifth monarchy or despotism upon the world—an effort in which she will not ultimately succeed. The words of prophecy are very emphatic: "Thus saith the Lord God, behold I am against thee, O Gog, Prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal," i.e., Russia, Muscovy, and Siberia—as old maps show— Emperor of all the Russias. In that prophecy we are told that in the day when the Jews are restored and are dwelling in prosperous security in their own land, this great northern power, moved by covetousness, will invade and endeavour to take possession of their country.

Now let Christians in accordance with the in- junction of our Lord be on the alert in watching the development of events—it will not surprise them even in this critical and sceptical age to find the Bible a very matter-of-fact book.

This return of the Jews seems to be fairly begun; it is synchronous with the occurrence of a remarkable spiritual movement among them. They have ceased almost to regard "the Nazarene" with the repugnance they have cherished for so many centuries; we need not be astonished if soon they generally recognise Him as the Messiah, and acknowledge Him as their Lord. In that, let us hope not very distant, day, they will look upon Him whom they pierced, and mourn for Him as one mourneth for his only son.

Further, it is worth noticing in the political world that not only is Russia doing her utmost to expel the Jews from the lands whither they have been driven; but is at the present moment making, it is known, urgent efforts in preparation for another and speedy onslaught upon Turkey—the present tyrant of Palestine. Like a trapped bear, Russia has been trying for centuries to break through the fence which keeps her back from the ocean; and, foiled in one direction, she turns to another. The way to the Mediterranean through Constantinople is more firmly debarred to her than ever, through the watchful jealousy of Austria and her allies; whilst any dreams she may have entertained of making her way south to the Indian Ocean, by way of Afghanistan, are for the moment, at any rate, seen to be vain. But through Armenia, by way of Erzeroum and the valley of the Euphrates, into the province of Aleppo, the route lies open; and, whilst cutting Turkey in Asia in two, she may very probably, in a way her adversaries are powerless to prevent, suddenly plant herself on the Levant, taking possession of North Syria; and, looking westwards into the expanse of the Mediterranean, defy the whole world to dislodge her. If so, we may expect very wonderful events to develop there- upon—and that more speedily, perhaps, than we were disposed to anticipate. I ask my fellow Christians to take their atlas and their Bible in their hands, and prayerfully to study the things which are written in that book.

The nations are arming to the teeth, and laying up plenteous store of machinery and material of destruction, such as the world never heard of before, and Har Magedon, the mountain of Megido, is in the Carmel range, perhaps some fifteen miles from Nazareth, and as far from the coast of the Mediterranean.

"The wise shall understand." "When these things begin to come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads; because your redemption draweth nigh."

H. McINTOSH.

THE LONDON CITY MISSION.

SIR,—The impossibility of the regular Church organisations overtaking the evangelisation of the "lapsed masses;" the 40,000 men and women who live without any settled home; the sad facilities for sin and vice provided in a city of such dimensions; the large criminal population, the power exercised for good or evil by the vast bodies of working men at the railway stations, in factories, and at the docks; the infidelity which is actively propagated; the ill-feeling aroused by the strikes—these and many other things bespeak the necessity for such evangelisation work as that carried on by the London City Mission, which is all the more effec- tive on account of its unsectarian character; and which, by pioneering the way, is a valuable auxi- liary to the work of the churches.

There are now five hundred missionaries on the Society's staff, of whom, more than a hundred, specially qualified for the work, are set apart for the visitation of cabmen, coachmen, and grooms, omnibus and tramcar men, canal boatmen, dock- men, cattle drovers, railway-men, the police, navvies, the landlords and frequenters of public- houses and coffee-shops, the servants in hotels and clubs, the inmates of hospitals and common lodging- houses, and the many thousands of foreigners resi- dent in London, of whom a large number can only be reached by those who can speak their native tongue. The work is elementary in its character, the foundation of repentance and faith being laid by the missionaries, who urge such as experience a change of heart to join some section of the Christian Church, that they may be built up and sanctified. I earnestly commend the work to the sympathy of your readers.—Yours, &c.,

F. A. BEVAN,
Chairman and Treasurer.

THE LAWYERS' PRAYER UNION.—The half- yearly public meeting of the Lawyers' Prayer Union was held last week in Bloomsbury Church Hall, Mr. Bompas, Q.C., in the chair. Several barristers and solicitors addressed the meeting. Mr. Dennes referred to kindred associations, the Bankers' and Medical Prayer Unions, and the Stockbrokers' Christian Association. The secre- tary spoke of the ridicule cast upon the Union, and urged members to rise above it. The chair- man concluded the meeting by reminding members that religion was (if real) a part of daily life— that which would enable them to spend a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, which he heartily wished them all.

Evangelistic Notes.

Islington Y.M.C.A.—A special eight days' mission has been conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. A number of young men have professed decision for Christ, backsliders have been restored, and believers built up and strengthened.

Wolverhampton.—A successful series of mission services extending over eight days has been held in the Presbyterian Church, Merridale-road. They were conducted by the pastor (Rev. Wm. Johnston), assisted one evening by Rev. W. F. Holt, of Nechells Presbyterian Church, Birmingham.

Abergavenny.—A very successful series of services has been held in connection with Tregmore-street Chapel by Rev. F. C. Spurr, of Cardiff. The afternoon Bible-readings were attended by Christians of all denominations, and were much appreciated. Several professed to decide for the Saviour at the evening services.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has been conducting services in the Bible Christian Chapel, Brotton, with encouraging results. Many notorious characters among the Cleveland ironstone miners have professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. Bradlaugh distributed large quantities of Anti-Infidel literature among the miners.

Bracknell, Berks.—A most successful four weeks' mission has lately come to an end here, conducted by Mr. Andrew McQuiston, evangelist, aided in singing by Lady Keane and Lady Pigot. Many professed conversions are reported. So encouraging have been the results that for the next two months Mr. McQuiston has arranged to preach the Gospel two nights a week.

Mr. John W. Taylor, of the Evangelisation Society, has completed a two weeks' mission at Cox Green Mills, near Bolton, in a room set apart by the proprietors (Messrs. J. & T. Garnett) for the preaching of the Gospel. During the past seven or eight years Sunday evening and week-night services have been held with blessed results. At the farewell meeting of the mission there was a goodly number gathered, principally of the working classes. Very stirring and refreshing testimony was given by some of the converts.

Mr. Henry Thorne closed a ten days' mission in St. Michael Hall, Radford, Nottingham, on Monday, 16th inst. From the first Sunday there was manifest blessing. Every evening inquirers were to be found in the rooms set apart for the purpose, and sometimes the workers had their time very fully occupied. A remarkable meeting of men took place on the last Sunday afternoon, when Mr. Thorne spoke with much power upon the subject, "Man without God." The daily Bible-readings were greatly appreciated by the Christians and the workers who gathered around the vicar of the parish, Rev. C. Lea Wilson.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken's fortnight's mission to Banff closed on Tuesday week. It has been very successful, five churches in Banff joining heartily in it, as well as all the congregations in the neighbouring town of Macduff. The after-meetings have been attended by many. At the farewell meeting in the Parish Church, on December 16, memorial cards, specially designed for all who had received a specific blessing in their own souls, were given by Mr. Aitken to 137 persons; while at the farewell meeting in Macduff on the 18th many more were asked for. Mr. Aitken has been all throughout assisted by Mrs. Crouch, who conducted a meeting for women every afternoon.

BAPTIST FORWARD MOVEMENT.—Rev. F. B. Meyer has very generously undertaken the honorary superintendence of the "Forward Movement" of the London Baptist Association from January 1 next. Mr. Meyer will remove his residence to the West Central District, in order that he may supervise the work which it is proposed to carry on among the poor of that neighbourhood by means of lady and gentlemen visitors and other helpful organisations. One or two ministers will, it is expected, be engaged to work with Mr. Meyer in holding special services among the churches of the Association, and especially in seeking to stimulate and revive churches in the more densely populated districts of the Metropolis. The whole work will be carried on under the direction of the Extension Fund Committee of the Association. It is almost needless to add that this arrangement will not interfere in the least with Mr. Meyer's important work at Regent's-park Chapel.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. S. A. Selwyn has arrived safely at Sierra Leone.

It is proposed to found a new bishopric for Birmingham. The estimated cost of founding and maintaining the proposed bishopric is £90,000.

The foundation-stone of a new church for Southport was laid on Saturday week by Miss A. M. Burton, of The Warren, Birkdale, who has not only contributed largely to the building fund, but has also endeared herself to the poor by visiting them in their homes, and to the children by teaching a class in the Sunday-school. The church is to be erected in the neighbourhood of Birkdale Common, where a large population has sprung up.

St. Stephen's Hall, recently erected in connection with the Mission and other work carried on by Rev. W. Dodge, vicar, and the clerical staff belonging to St. Stephen's Church, Tabard-street, Southwark, was opened on Saturday week. The hall comprises a spacious room capable of seating between 400 and 500 persons, together with class-rooms, and other apartments for club meetings, gymnastic exercises, and a host of other purposes connected with education and recreation.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A temperance society has been started in connection with the Chalmers Free Church, Dundee. Saturday meetings are held with a view to reclaim drunkards.

Rev. John McNeill preached in the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Tuesday, last week, in aid of a fund for liquidating the debt on Rev. R. Stewart's church, Durham-road, Gateshead, and the collection exceeded 100 guineas. There was a congregation of 3000. During the sermon Mr. McNeill was frequently applauded.

The third anniversary of Rev. W. Michael Smith's pastorate at Bow-road, E., was celebrated a few days ago. The workers in connection with this church are doing a good work in a crowded and very needy district. The membership of the church at present numbers eighty-six, and the attendance at the services is slowly, but steadily, increasing. The Sunday-school has risen from three teachers and thirty scholars to twenty-four teachers and over two hundred scholars. A children's Gospel band meets weekly, having ninety members enrolled.

BAPTIST.

Rev. Sydney J. Jones, of the Pastors' College, has accepted the pastorate of Horton-street Chapel, Kensington, W., in succession to Rev. W. Frith, now of Harringay.

The first monthly conference of the "Prayer Union of North Wales and the Border Counties" was held at Cefn. The meetings were of a spiritual and helpful character, the greater part of the time being spent in prayer.

The young men's Bible-class connected with the Baptist Chapel at Bishop's Stortford, recently held its second annual meeting. The secretary's report showed that in the summer months the class was turned into an open-air workers' class, and services were held at various parts of the town. Some members went to preach in the villages round about.

METHODIST.

The Primitive Methodist Connexion have fitted out a mission party to proceed to the eastern part of the Zambesi district of Central Africa, and known as the Barotsé country. The party consists of three Englishmen, Messrs. Buckenham, Baldwin, and Ward, who left this country last April, and have been completing their preparations at Aliwal North, in South Africa. Early in the New Year the mission party, accompanied by an interpreter and native assistants, will be on its way to Kimberley, en route to the Zambesi.

In connection with the Bible Christian Connexion, a circuit convention for the deepening of spiritual life and extending the work of God has been held at Penzance. The conference began with a vigorous address on "The Forward Movement," by Rev. J. Luke. This movement was described as "the Church engaged in aggressive work, and adapting its methods to the changed times in which we live." Short addresses were delivered by other brethren, and the meeting was thrown open for Christian testimony. A very blessed time was experienced.

On Tuesday week at Locke-fields Chapel, Southwark, a public meeting was held to welcome the newly-appointed missionaries. Mr. Meakin, who has recently resigned an appointment [illegible] to devote himself to the interests of the recently inaugurated Scandinavian branch of the London Wesleyan Mission. Rev. T. H. Hawkins, superintendent of the South London Mission, seconded Mr. Meakin and his helpers a warm reception. Mr. Josiah Nix, of the West Central Mission, delivered an earnest and practical address respecting the work in the West-end.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Owing to ill-health Dr. Parker has asked to be relieved of the chairmanship of the London Congregational Union for 1890. The committee have, however, asked him to reconsider his decision, in the hope that his wonted will be restored. On Monday the members of the City Temple entertained Dr. and Mrs. Parker on the occasion of the anniversary of their silver wedding.

At the half-yearly meetings of the London Congregational Union, held on Tuesday last week, in the Memorial Hall, there was a discussion on "The Forward Movement." Rev. Arthur Hall said he felt that the Congregational churches should each contain [illegible] the elements of the Forward Movement, and adopt methods and spirit to the needs of the age in which we live. Rev. R. F. Horton explained his great aim of the work of the West Central Mission. His the Forward Movement was [illegible] in the several churches. [illegible] Congregationalists in some large buildings to reaches of the district.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—Rev. F. B. Meyer will give the annual address to missionaries on New Year's Day, at 11 a.m., in the Lecture Hall, Bridewell-place, New Bridge-street, E.C.

CITY OF LONDON TOTAL ABSTINENCE UNION.—Encouraging success continues to attend the efforts of this organisation, which aims at forwarding the work of total abstinence in the city houses. Year by year access is gained to further warehouses, in which meetings of the employés are held. A goodly number of pledges were taken last year, but much remains yet to be done. The office of the Union is 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

Good Shepherd Institute: Ragged Schools and Mission [illegible] Old Kent-road, S.E.—[illegible] hope to be able, for about four months, to provide [illegible] little "sparrows" three times a week with a dinner of Irish stew; also dinners to poor and aged persons. Last winter we gave Irish stew dinners to 3600 poor children.—Frederick Blaynee, secretary.

Miss F. M. Fraser, 30, Onslow-gardens, London, S.W., hon. sec., Convalescent Sick Aid and Holiday Department of the Y.W.C.A., writes:—"Several cases of great need known to us need to be sent for temporary enjoyment to mild winter resorts to regain health and strength for future toil, but our fund is at a low ebb, and unless it be replenished by gifts we must reluctantly decline for the other winter cases."

OTES ON DAILY READINGS.

ese Notes run concurrently with the Readings of the "Bible Prayer Union," founded and conducted by Rev. Thomas ardson, Vicar of St. Benet's, Mile End-road, London, E., of card of membership may be had for 1d., and Monthly Notes, red by himself, for 1s. per annum, post free. We hope all our rs will become members of the "Bible and Prayer Union," ake its Monthly Notes.

SUNDAY, DEC. 29.—1 Chron. IX.

have here an account of those who first settled Jerusalem after the return from captivity. se included people from several tribes (3—9). names differ in some particulars from those n in Neh. xi. 4—6; so that it is hardly likely same persons are meant. There were too many each one to be mentioned by name. What one ord omits the other supplies.

full account is given of the priests (10—13). is described as "ruler of the house of God")—not the high priest, but probably his deputy. are described as "very able men for the work he service of the house of God" (13). The past tory of the nation had proved that there could no true prosperity except as the work of God's se was faithfully done. True religion is the t establishment of a nation. It was well for Jews that they had priests so willing and so e to serve in the house of God.

The Levites (14—34).—The sin of the people merly had been in the neglect of the ordinances God's house. No small part of their punish- nt consisted in the loss of them—hence their sire, after their return to their own land, to put service of the sanctuary in order. Following example of David and Samuel (22), the work s divided among the Levites. Some were por- s (22, 26), some cared for the vessels and the eat offerings (28, 29), some were singers (33), ile the sons of the priests made the holy anoint- oil (30). These dwelt either in Jerusalem (34), in surrounding villages (16, 22). The whole rangement was wisely made. Each one knew his ork, and was expected to make it his business to it. Work done under such conditions was likely be done well. The account of Saul's family is peated (35—44), probably to introduce the story Saul's death which follows.

MONDAY, DEC. 30.—1 Chron. X.

The incidents of this chapter were recorded in Sam. xxxi. They are sufficiently interesting and ggestive to deserve repetition.

Saul's death (1—7).—The battle was fought after e meeting with the witch of Endor. Saul ntered into it with the memory of that awful pre- iction of his doom which Samuel had pronounced. is three sons were slain, among them Jonathan e friend of David (2). Saul, sore wounded of the rchers, lost heart; and to save himself the igno- iny of death by the Philistines, became his own estroyer (4). "His own destroyer!" Was he ot that in another sense? The evil he had com- itted slew him. "The wages of sin is death" Jas. i. 15).

The Philistines' triumph (8—10).—To them it is victory of Dagon over Jehovah. So do men mis- ead the judgments which God inflicts through hem upon his people. Neither Dagon nor all he people who worshipped him would have had ower against Saul but for Saul's sin. The same s still true. No enemy can injure the cause of God, so long as his people are true to Him.

The kindness of Jabesh Gilead (11, 12).—There were some who remembered Saul's former greatness, nd who had not forgotten the deliverance he had wrought for them at the commencement of his eign (1 Sam. xi.). While the Philistines exulted, he men of Jabesh Gilead mourned. The incident s a very touching one: but it only serves to make he fall of Saul appear the greater.

The reason for Saul's death (13, 14).—His trans- gression was against "the word of the Lord." It s easy to repeat the sin of his disobedience. It was followed by his rejection of the Lord Himself. A man who does not keep God's word cannot "inquire" of God. The solemn lesson of this ncident is, "Seek ye the Lord while He may be found" (Isa. lv. 6, 7).

TUESDAY, DEC. 31.—1 Chron. XI.

This chapter recapitulates, in ver. 1—9, what was given to us in 2 Sam. v. 1—10; and in ver. 10—47, repeats the account of David's mighty men previously given in 2 Sam. xxiii. 8—39.

The throne of David (1—3).—He had already reigned over Judah in Hebron for seven years. Meanwhile Abner had set up Ishbosheth over Israel; then deserted him; both Abner and Ishbosheth had been murdered (2 Sam. i.—iv.); and now the people are eager to have a king worthy of their allegiance. It is good when the bondage of sin becomes so grievous that men groan under it, and long for the easy yoke of Christ. The people had three excellent reasons for making David king: his relationship to them (1); his former service for them (2); and God's appointment (2). All these reasons equally operate with us in making Jesus King of our lives. None so deserves, or is so fitted, to reign over us as He (Heb. ii. 7; Isa. ix. 6, 7).

The city of David (4—9).—Jebus seemed impregnable, and the inhabitants were confident that David could not take it (5); but nothing that needs to be done is impossible to the man whom God has called and anointed. It was a difficult enterprise, and brought to the front Joab, as possessing the greatest valour and skill. The prospect of being chief captain fired his ambition, and gave him greater boldness.

The chief men of David (10—47).—The Lord was with David (9); evidence of this is found in the worthy followers raised up to establish his kingdom (10). Proofs of the Lord's presence are still often found in the support of faithful and true men. This catalogue differs very slightly from that previously given; but the names from 41—47 are added. Remember, it was not the fact that they did great exploits that made them great, but that they did them for David. Every loyal service, however humble, becomes great when rendered to the King. That such wonderful exploits were possible was a fulfilment of Josh. xxiii. 10.

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 1.—1 Chron. XII.

This is an interesting record of the helpers that came to David in Ziklag and in Hebron.

(1) His helpers in Ziklag (1—22).—These were the more valuable because they came during the time of David's humiliation—while he was a fugitive from the hatred of Saul (1). They did not wait for the moment of triumph. They were willing to "suffer with him." Imitate them in your loyalty to Jesus. Identify yourself with Him now, not because his course is at present triumphant, but because He is God's anointed: "If we suffer with Him, we shall also reign with Him" (2 Tim. ii. 12). These followers came from many tribes—some from the family of Saul (1—7); some sons of Gad (8—15); some from Judah and Benjamin together (16—18); and others from Manasseh (20, 21). The accessions from all quarters were so numerous that his army became like "the host of God" (22).

They were true helpers. They came, not for what they could get, but to be "helpers of the war" (1). They were not only David's, but were "on his side" (18). His enemies were theirs. They were variously equipped and qualified. Note their descriptions (2, 8, 14, 21). Oh for men as fit for the battle, as skilful in the use of our weapons, as valiant and as fearless in the service of our King.

(2) His helpers in Hebron (23—40).—We are told (2 Sam. v. 1) that the tribes of Israel came to David; here we have a detailed account of the numbers each tribe brought to him. All the tribes are mentioned, for all Israel were of one heart to make David king (38). Like those who came to the hold at Ziklag, they are well qualified to help David. They were well armed (24, 33, 37); men of valour (25, 28, 30); expert in war (33); could keep rank (38), and were single-hearted (33, 38). Can we not reproduce these qualities in the followers of King Jesus? Given these conditions, and the answer to the prayer "Thy kingdom come" would not be far off.

THURSDAY, JAN. 2.—1 Chron. XIII.

During the days of Saul the ark of God had been neglected (3). As soon as David is settled upon the throne he begins to pay honour to it.

His conference with the people (1—4).—His proposal was that all Israel—whom he calls "brethren" (2)—with the priests and Levites, should have a share in bringing the ark to Jerusalem. It was a prudent thing for him to submit his proposal to the people's representatives. He thus put honour upon them, and secured their interest in the undertaking. But it does not appear that he consulted with God. There is no wisdom even in a multitude of counsellors, if God is left out.

The ark removed (5—7).—This incident was previously described (2 Sam. vi. 1—11). There was intense and widespread enthusiasm (5), as that people gathered from afar to take part in the ceremony. But the zeal was not according to knowledge. So far from consulting with God, David took pattern from the Philistines. We cannot do God's work successfully by adopting the world's methods.

The death of Uzza (9—14).—This was the sad result of David's imitation of the Philistines. It was a terrible visitation, reminding us that God is to "be sanctified in them that come nigh unto Him" (Lev. x. 3). What was excusable in the Philistines could not be allowed in David, to whom definite instructions had been given. Increased light means increased responsibility. David was "displeased," and was "afraid of God" (11, 12). It was not the right spirit in which to receive the chastisement; but he was surely taught by the blessing given to the house of Obededom that it was not God nor the ark that he needed to fear. He had yet to learn that God's work must be done in God's way.

FRIDAY, JAN. 3.—1 Chron. XIV.

The help which Hiram sent towards building David's house was regarded by David as an evidence that God had confirmed him as king (1, 2). He recognised God as acting through Hiram. He saw also that his kingdom was thus established, not for his own sake, but "because of his people Israel" (2).

The Philistines, unlike Hiram, envied David (8), and made two attempts to defeat him (9, 13). On each occasion David did not commence to fight without first inquiring of God (10, 14). He did not make the one appeal suffice for both occasions. Though the circumstances were similar, he sought and obtained definite guidance for them both. It was well he did so, for the second method was entirely different from the first (10, 14, 15). In both cases he obtained the victory. After the first he destroyed the gods of the enemy (12). When the Philistines had got possession of the ark (1 Sam. v. 1, 2), they paid honour to it by putting it in the house of Dagon. No such honour did David pay to their helpless idols.

SATURDAY, JAN. 4.—1 Chron. XV.

This chapter records a second and successful attempt to bring the ark to Jerusalem. In the meantime, David had learned wherein his previous mistake lay. They had not sought God after the due order (13). Note the preparation David made for it (1).—While building houses for himself or his family, he prepared a place also for the ark of God. His instructions to the priests and Levites (2—15).—He had evidently consulted God's Word, and had learned that none but Levites might bear such a burden (Numb. vii. 9). It was holy work, and the priests and Levites sanctified themselves for it. They must be clean who bear the vessels of the Lord. The shoulders of men appeared less secure than the new cart; but it was God's method, and therefore right. The preparations for giving the ark welcome (16—24).—Neeman, Asaph, and Etham (17) came into prominence in connection with this service. Various musical instruments were to be used (19—21), for it was a glad occasion, and was to be accompanied with "a joyful noise unto the Lord."

David's exuberant joy (25—29).—He and the elders of Israel attended its removal. When the Levites bore the ark it was recognised as an indication of the help of God (26), and thankofferings were presented to Him. David entered into the occasion with all his heart "dancing and playing" (29). But Michal, here significantly called, not David's wife, but "the daughter of Saul," despised him. She showed the spirit of her father. Enthusiasm in a religious cause was without meaning to her. A stranger intermeddleth not with the heart joy of the Christian.

An excellent article on "Sermon Reporting," full of good advice to aspirants after phonographic proficiency, appears in The Phonetic Journal for Dec. 21 (1d. Pitman & Sons.).

Murray's Illustrated Penny Pocket GUIDE TO CHELTENHAM (J. P. Murray, Paternoster-row) is a handy and well-illustrated vade mecum to the places and points of interest in this fashionable Gloucestershire town.

Gospel booklets should be clear and pointed as well as attractive in character. Such, in an eminent degree, are Major Whittle's "I WISH I HAD" Series. They are illustrated, and made up in sixpenny packets (Nos. 1 and 2) of twelve assorted. In point of warning and appeal, lovingly and urgently expressed, these tracts deserve to rank among the best. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.

Mr. Henry H. Bourn, who has made a special study of Romanism in its modern developments, has written two more pamphlets full of facts, which Protestants need to bear well in mind at the present time. The titles are: A PROTEST AGAINST RITUALISM AND ITS UNSCRIPTURAL TEACHING, and A VINDICATION OF THE LIFE AND WORK OF MARTIN LUTHER. Mr. Bourn is not behind in adducing the authorities for his statements, and his reasoning is cogent as well as forcible. (6d. each. Partridge & Co.)

Sunday Afternoon, January 5.

THE FORERUNNER ANNOUNCED.—LUKE I. 5—17.

GOLDEN TEXT: MAL. iii. 1.

"THE fulness of time" had come; and the long promised Messiah was at hand. The sceptre had passed from Judah, and was in the hands of Herod, an Idumean. The true Shiloh was therefore about to appear (Gen. xlix. 10).

I. The parents of the Forerunner (5—7).—Note: (1) They were of the priestly family (5). God put honour upon an office He had instituted. "As from the seclusion of a convent He took the reformer of the Church, so from the loins of an Israelitish priest, He causes to come forth the man who is to introduce the Messiah."—Godet. "The course of Abia" was the eighth of the twenty-four courses into which David had divided the priests.

(2) "They were both righteous" (6); not only before men. That is a poor piety that is intended only for the gaze of men (Matt. vi. 1). Theirs was heart religion: their chief desire was to be accepted with God. Their righteousness consisted not in sentiment, but in conduct. Their walk was in obedience to God's commandments=moral law; and his ordinances=religious ceremonies. And to all these (Ps. cxix. 6) they were "blameless"—not sinless or faultless, as the incident proves. They were "approved by God and esteemed by men." (3) Their trial (7).—To be childless was a heavy trial to a Hebrew woman. It was felt the more keenly because often regarded by others, and by the persons themselves, as an evidence of the Divine displeasure. As they were now "well stricken in years," there seemed no likelihood of this heavy trial being removed. However they might misunderstand it, it was only a preparation for greater blessing. The experience of Sarah and Hannah was to be repeated to Elizabeth. She was to find her greatest joy in connection with her sorest trial (John xv. 2; Heb. xii. 11).

II. The angel's visit (8—12).—The time was significant. Morning and evening the incense had to be offered (Exod. xxx. 7, 8). The priest was in the Temple at the golden altar performing this service, while the people stood without praying (9, 10). The incense—typical of the perfect offering of our Great High Priest—formed "a chariot for the people's imperfect prayers," and made them acceptable to God (Ps. cxli. 2; Rev. viii. 3). The angel was Gabriel (19). Other appearances of the same angel are mentioned in Dan. viii. 16, ix. 21; Luke i. 26. His appearance always seems to be connected with some purpose of mercy; that of Michael with some work of judgment (Dan. xii. 1; Jude 9; Rev. xii. 7). Is it not likely that these are the two angels who appeared with the Lord when He announced to Abraham, and afterwards executed, the destruction of Sodom? That the angel should be in the Temple is not wonderful, for are we not surrounded by angels (2 Kings vi. 17; Ps. xxxiv. 8)? If they do not appear, it is not because they are not present, but because we have not eyes to see them. Was not the significance of the event deserving of such a miraculous appearance? However strange it appears alone, yet, when viewed in relation to the Saviour's advent, it appears natural enough. Zacharias feared (12), as man always does when brought into contact with the supernatural. The consciousness of sin explains the fear. Without a second birth, how impossible it is for man to enjoy the presence of God.

III. The angel's message (13—17).—"Fear not." That was the first thing Zacharias needed. A fearful, disquieted spirit cannot receive the Divine message. "Thy prayer is heard." What prayer? Probably the prayer that years ago Zacharias and his wife had unitedly offered that God would grant them a son. But that was so long since that it had perhaps ceased to be a matter of expectation to Zacharias. God remembers prayers which we forget. Not only is a child promised, but his name is announced. John means "Jehovah shows grace." Was not his name fulfilled in the circumstances of his birth? His birth would occasion joy to many besides his parents (14); for he would be great in the only sense that could delight the heart of Zacharias. His greatness would result, first, from his separation to God as a Nazarite (15); next, from the power of the Holy Ghost which should rest upon him, making his work effectual in turning many to the Lord (16); and, chiefly from his work as the forerunner of the Lord Himself (17). There is no greatness other than that associated with holiness of character, and power to serve others. This, in measure, is possible to us all.

Such the message of the angel. How strangely Zacharias received it, and how severely his unbelief was punished! (18—20).

The Book World.

PARABLES IN SONG. By Ira Gitton Ferguson. 2s. Nisbet & Co. A small volume of verses chiefly religious. The rhyme of many might be improved.

HOW THE VILLAGE WAS WON. By Isabel S. Robson. 1s. 6d. Partridge. A little story that ought to set Christian girls to work at once. Dorothy and Faith will excite the emulation of all who want to know "How the Village was Won."

BY A WAY THEY KNEW NOT: Memorials of Blind Fanny Winton. By Martha Rigden. Fourth edition. 1s. George Stoneman. An interesting and devoutly written little memoir, which has proved a blessing in the lives of many afflicted believers.

ELIAS TRUST'S BOYS. By Margaret Surrey. 3s. Jarrold & Sons. A Cornish story, illustrative of "Mony a mickle mak's a muckle." Lessons of filial duty and thrift are admirably inculcated. The pages are as bright as the tone of the story is undoubtedly healthful.

MANTLE AND STAFF. By J. R. Gillies, M.A. 1s. Nisbet. Five discourses on the Christian life. The title is taken from the fact that the first sermon is on "Elijah's Mantle," and the second on "Elisha's Staff." Freshness of thought and plainness of application characterise the whole.

MARIGOLD. By L. T. Meade. 1s. 6d. Partridge. A refreshing, intensely bright little story, beautifully and liberally illustated. Marigold is the blessing that God sends to win self-willed Cicely to Himself, and to her stepmother. The tale is told in the quaintest, sweetest way possible.

BOOKS FOR THE NURSERY. The Religious Tract Society has made a powerful, and undoubtedly successful, bid for the blessing of the baby world, by publishing such grand books as OUR LITTLE DOTS' PICTURE SCRAP BOOK, parts 1 and 2. The large pages are bright with pictures, which will minister much happiness to young folks in general. (2s. 6d. each part.)

HYMNS OF OUR PILGRIMAGE. By Rev. John Brownlie. 2s. Nisbet. The minister of the Free Church, Portpatrick, is a sacred poet of a high order. These hymns interpret the inmost thoughts and aspirations of those "who desire a better country, that is, a heavenly." It is only fitting that some of the compositions should be songs to Christ and psalms of praise to God.

TEACHING TALKS. By Ebenezer Wilmshurst. Wilmshurst, Paternoster-square. The name of this original book is well chosen, and very appropriate. The teaching is never tedious, the talk is never twaddle. No children can read about the cage-birds shown by experience without interest and profit. The "Wonderful Ship" is an excellent child lecture on human anatomy. There is not a weak chapter in the book.

GLORIA PATRI. By J. R. Macduff, D.D. 2s. 6d. T. Nelson & Sons. A book of private prayer for morning and evening, from first to last in the note of the opening clause of the Lord's Prayer. Those who know God as "Father" indeed will find in these beautiful pages an expression of their heart thoughts in adoration, as well as a statement of their inmost desires, as joint heirs with Christ of the glory to be revealed. The preface on "Our Father" grandly outlines the blessings of the sonship enjoyed through and in the exalted Saviour.

THE BIRD'S NEST, AND OTHER SERMONS, FOR CHILDREN OF ALL AGES. By Rev. S. Cox, D.D. 3s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. The title of this volume is derived from the fact that the opening discourse is expository of Deut. xxii. 6, 7, and points the admirable lessons which may be learned from the gracious injunction which God gave to Israel by Moses, whereby the dam was spared in cases where young birds were taken from the nest for food. Every sermon is rich in thought and suggestion, and it is not surprising that the work is now in its third edition. Occasionally the author's peculiar point of view is to be detected, but practical counsel rather than doctrinal statement is the object of the book.

REGISTERED SUNSHINE; or, Miss Rothsay Observatory. By E. S. Elliott. Seeley & Co. charming book from a well-known pen. How mu of "sunshine" there is in life, even in the lif weary invalids, if only, with a mind stayed up God, an effort is made to "register it." In the for of a story, this blessed fact is admirably enforce We all need to cultivate the habit of praise, and this Miss Elliott's book is a real and safe stim lant. Likely to prove specially welcome in a sick-room, these pages will assuredly brighten ma who fail to realise how much they have receive from God and owe to those about them. Th question of "healing by faith" is incidentall discussed in one chapter.

CHINESE GOSPEL LITERATURE. We have r ceived a bulky volume of sermons, entitled "Th Street Chapel Pulpit," by Rev. Hampden C. D Bose, minister at the Yang Yoh Hong, Soocho The discourses are two hundred in number, ar cover a wide range of evangelical subjects. Fro a notice of the work in The Chinese Recorder, w learn that the style is simple, Mandarin being th prevailing feature. Our contemporary says: "Th author maintains what is called the old orthode views of Gospel truth. The language used is we suited to the end in view. Foreign students, esp cially such as are seeking to acquire a useful an enlarged vocabulary, may be greatly benefited b dipping into these pages." We trust this volum will prove of great service to the cause of th Gospel in the Chinese empire.

DONATIONS
TO FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1889.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Owing to the necessity of going to press before the Christmas holidays, our Donation List for this week only includes sums received up to noon of Friday, December 20.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

Appeals.

The Hope Mission (Banner-street, St. Luke's).—This Mission has a soup kitchen, and gives soup dinners for one farthing. About one thousand dinners were thus supplied last winter. In addition to the usual mission work there is a crèche for the care of the infant children of mothers who require to go out to work. Contributions will be thankfully received by Mr. S. J. GLOVER, 88, Bishopsgate-street, E.C.

Billingsgate Christian Mission, 83, Lower Thames-street.—We still require help to pay for replacing the Mission premises recently removed for municipal improvements. We supply dinner orders and temporary lodging tickets to the destitute men we find seeking for work in the street. We are now arranging to give firing and materials for a dinner to poor residents in this district.—ALFRED WALTERS, hon. sec.

Camberwell Mission and Ragged Schools.—We desire to provide dinners and entertainments to some six hundred poor school children, and Christmas tree and tea for another hundred; also teas for the adults and the elder lads and girls. In all, during last winter we were enabled to supply fifteen thousand meals to the poor and destitute. This year we hope to do more. Seriously need assistance. FREDERICK RAINEY, hon. sec., 67, Grove Hill-road, Denmark Hill.

Funds, &c., urgently needed to assist the Ragged School Union in clothing and feeding some fifty thousand children during the next three months, and to see that they do not lack good cheer during the Christmas season. £2000 to £3000 are also required for fitting up gymnasia in ragged schools and mission rooms. Money, clothing (old and new), boots, comforters, hats, and caps thankfully received by JOHN KIRK, secretary, Ragged School Union, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

Mr. W. H. Hughes, secretary of the Cancer Hospital, Fulham-road, Brompton, S.W., claims sympathy and support on behalf of this institution, founded specially for the treatment of the poor afflicted with this terrible disease, who are admitted free from all parts of the United Kingdom, without letters of recommendation. The ordinary expenditure of the hospital is some £3000 a year more than the reliable income, and to meet this deficit new annual subscriptions and donations are earnestly solicited.

Mr. William Sly, secretary of the General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution, 32, Sackville-street, Piccadilly, writes: "The objects of this Institution are to relieve aged and infirm domestic servants by granting them pensions and temporary relief. Ninety-eight are now in receipt of £15 and £20 each per annum. There are now 162 applicants, many of great age; but it is impossible to place them on the list of pensioners until the committee have received greater support from the charitable public."

THE COW CROSS MISSION.

Under the General Superintendence of

Mr. WILLIAM CATLIN.

26th ANNUAL APPEAL.

s Mission has for its primary object the preaching of the pel in the Mission Hall, and in adjacent Factories, Hospi-, Workhouses, Prisons, Public Houses, in Open Air, by Sale of Bibles, and reading aloud the Word of God in at thoroughfares; by Cottage Meetings and House-to-use visitation; also le Readings, Mothers' etings, Temperance ctures, Sunday and eek Evening Instruc- to the Inhabitants the parish of Clerken-ll, which has a popu-ion of 70,000 souls.

The efforts of the Mis-n are conducted under e general supervision of ll - known Christian ends, on purely unde-minational principles. nnual Report published March.

The prayerful sympathy nd pecuniary help of the eople of God are greatly needed at this moment, and are arnestly appealed to, on behalf of this thoroughly Evangelistic ork, that it may continue, as in past years, to be a means of piritual blessing to perishing sinners, and that help in tem-oral things may not be lacking for the sick poor during the nclement season of Winter. It is sincerely to be hoped that hrough such help we may be enabled to continue our Half-enny Dinners to the thousands of poor little children who will oubtless crowd in upon us till the second week in March. Ve are not assisted by any "society."

THE POOR CHILDREN'S DINNER TABLE.

"I would advise all Christians who rejoice in knowing of good steady work amongst the poor, to read William Catlin's last Annual Report. Clerkenwell is his district, which I have known for many years, and have had exceptional opportunities of seeing the genuineness of the work and the servant."

FREDERICK NEWTH, 44, Percival Street, Clerkenwell.

A SPECIAL APPEAL.

"RETIRING poverty still hides its head," and must be sought out to be relieved. We are particularly anxious to provide a plain but substantial Dinner for a certain number of poor families, well known to us, especially those of the "household of faith," on Christmas Day at their own homes (distribution on Christmas Eve); also, during the first week of the New Year, to give the poor Mothers a Tea, and our Sunday School and Band of Hope children an extra Dinner of Roast Beef and Plum Pudding, and some articles of Warm Clothing, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster - buildings, E.C.; at the Office of WORD AND WORK, 48, Paternoster - row, E.C.; by Mr. G. KIRKHAM, 9, Ribblesdale-rd., Hornsey, N.; Mr. F. NEWTH, 44, Percival-street, Clerkenwell, E.C.; also by

BACK OF VOLUME.

The Christian Portrait Gallery

VERY SUITABLE FOR A PRESENT.

Consisting of OVER ONE HUNDRED well-executed Portraits of well-known Christian Men and Women of the present day. Each Portrait is accompanied by a well-written Biographic Sketch.

Over 400 pages of Letterpress, Demy Quarto, Attractively Bound, Bevell Boards, Gilt Edges, 10s. 6d.

As a CHRISTMAS or NEW YEAR'S Present.

"This is certainly a splendid volume. The Portraits are beautifully executed; and in all the instances in which we can speak from personal knowledge, are life-like in their accuracy. To each Portrait a written Biographical Notice is appended. Paper, printing, and binding are superb. This is a volume which would ornament any drawing-room table What an elegant Christmas or New Year present it will make!"

Christian Age, October 25, 1889.

"These Portraits and Biographies of over one hundred noteworthy Christian men and women are here collected into a handsomely-bound quarto volume, such as would make a splendid present for Christmas."

Methodist Times, November 7, 1889.

"This 'Portrait Gallery' can claim a high artistic value, and yet the smallness of its price brings it within the reach of many. What a capital Christmas-box it would make!"

Sword and Trowel, December, 1889.

"This handsome volume will form a most appropriate and acceptable Christmas present."

Irish Baptist Magazine, November, 1889.

'No more beautiful or more acceptable book has recently been issued from the press than The Christian Portrait Gallery. Whether one regards it merely as a work of art, or as helpful and stimulating literature, it alike gives the greatest satisfaction. There are over one hundred portraits of ministers and Christian men of all classes and creeds, and they are real likenesses, finished in the best style. And the letterpress is in every respect worthy of the portraiture work. Nothing could be more fit for a gift-book than this beautiful volume."

Christian Commonwealth, November 21, 1889.

"A handsome book. A collection of about one hundred fine portraits of leading Christian men, about two-thirds of whom are living. A biographic sketch is given of each. A good book for a present to a friend."—The Freeman, October 25, 1889.

For the Drawing-room Table.

"A beautifully-bound volume in good type, superior paper. It will be much valued as a n accompaniment to a drawing-room table, an useful book of reference. It does one good glance at the faces of so many men and wom all of whom, in various ways, have been wid known as having worked for the establishment God's kingdom during the present decade."

The Friend, November, 1889

"All who can purchase the volume will be ve pleased with it. It is beautifully printed a bound. A real drawing-room book!"

Christian Progress, December, 1889

As a Volume for the Library.

"Next to the study of God's Word, there scarcely anything so edifying and stimulating as t careful reading of faithful biography. A work li the present has, therefore, a distinct aim stimulating spiritual life by the presentation striking examples; and we hope this useful missi may be largely fulfilled. The binding of t volume renders it an ornament to the table, wh its contents make it a valuable addition to t library."—Footsteps of Truth, November, 1889.

As a Present to a Minister, Sunday-school Superintendent, or Teache

"Rev. Frederick Brown, who recently resigne his pastorate of twenty-four years at M——, . . received from the children of the Sunday-school richly-bound copy of THE CHRISTIAN PORTRA GALLERY."—British Weekly, November 1, 1889.

For Sending to Friends Abroad.

"The features and history of workers whos names have become familiar in connection wit many noble causes possess an especial interest i many distant lands as well as at home; and o this ground, as well as on its intrinsic merits, TH CHRISTIAN PORTRAIT GALLERY should command ready sale."—Literary World, October 25, 1889.

THE CATACOMBS AT ROME:

THEIR CONTENTS AND TEACHINGS.

By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S., Chamberlain of the City of London.
With Seventy Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

"There is no volume equally moderate in price giving to English readers so full and clear an account of those sepulchral remains of the early Christians."—Christian Leader.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF JOHN B. GOUGH.

Copyright Edition. Revised by Himself. With Additions, completing the Narrative. With Life-like Portrait and Three Full-page Illustrations. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

Special Cheap Edition. Unabridged. With Portrait. Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, novels, and romances—none of them is so stirring, or is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life-story."—Bolton Guardian.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS, OF EARLY CHRISTIAN AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD. By John Foxe.

With Twelve full-page Illustrations and Steel Plate Frontispiece. 1,083 pages. Handsomely bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.; Bevelled boards, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

"We are pleased to see the 'BOOK OF MARTYRS' well to the front. It is a great thing to have such a copy of FOXE in the market at 10s. 6d. We wish Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT an immediate sale of the present issue, which is marvellously cheap."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, in The Sword and Trowel.

OR, THE PROFIT AND PLEASURE OF BIBLE STUDY. With Introductions by Revs. JOSEPH COOK and J. H. VINCENT, D.D. Tinted covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth limp, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

"We have read this work with unusual pleasure. It is full of healthy thinking. It contains a large amount of information; abounds with wise counsels; is tersely and racily written; and is certain to captivate every reader who has even the least desire to be instructed in the many matters with which, in the preparation of it, the author had to deal."
The Baptist Magazine.

With New Registered Pannikin.

BY their peculiar construction—the glass chimney conducting and concentrating heat to the bottom of the water vessel—they give a larger amount of light and heat than can be obtained in any other lamp of the same class. Without smoke or smell.

Clarke's New Registered Pannikin.

By this invention any liquid food can be poured out or drunk without scum or grease passing through the spout, and prevents spilling when poured into a feeding bottle, so unavoidable with all other Pannikins. The Pannikins will fit all the old "Pyramid" Nursery Lamps, and can be purchased separately.

Clarke's "Pyramid" Night Lights and "Fairy Pyramid" Night Lights

Are the best in the world, and the only suitable ones for burning in the above, and for lighting passages, lobbies, &c. Sold everywhere.

Price of Lamps, 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 5s., and 6s. each. If any difficulty in obtaining them, write to CLARKE'S "PYRAMID" AND "FAIRY" LIGHT COMPANY, LIMITED, Cricklewood, London, N.W., for nearest Agent's address.

Who may be personally or relatively

INTERESTED in THIS MATTER.

MR. CONGREVE will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this Journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE PRONOUNCED "HOPELESS" AT THORNLIEBANK, GLASGOW.

This case of MRS. MCNAB was placed under my treatment on the 10th of last May; her husband then sending me a full statement of her symptoms and progress of her disease.

Consumption had been fatal in her family; two sisters and two brothers having died therefrom. Her illness had commenced six years before this with inflammation of the lungs, which left her in a weak condition. In course of time, cough came on and became permanent. Other symptoms set in which gradually increased. She had now much expectoration, sometimes mixed with blood, flushes, palpitation, and for some months had been losing flesh and strength. The legs and arms were particularly wasting. She had been under several doctors, and the one now attending her had just reported her case to be hopeless.

Medicine was sent with full instructions. In one week a slight improvement was manifest, her husband then writing: "I really believe it will have the desired effect."

She continued according to my advice, and in Sept., Mr. McNab writes me: "Thanks to God and you for such valuable medicine. My wife is better now than for years."

In a letter, dated November 6, 1889, with expressions of profound gratitude to God and to myself as the means of her restoration, he writes: "My wife, who has been under your treatment for Consumption since May last, is completely better. It has done wonders. She can perform all her household duties, which she could not do for a number of years before. I will make your treatment known all that I can. You are at liberty to use my testimony. Yours gratefully, DAVID MCNAB, Thornliebank, near Glasgow.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.
